Restorative Justice

How do we recreate the connections?

Restorative justice is broadly contrasted from the usual system of retributive justice by the underlying belief that crime occurs because the relationship connections that prevent crime have been broken or severed. To the degree that punishment works, whether as a deterrent, or as consequence of someone's actions, it does not address the issues of the social connections which have been severed or frayed.

Michael Clay, a longtime resident, musician and community elder (at least in terms of attainment in age) was attacked by two white teenagers in a manner, by a means, echoing the slaying of Mulageta Seraw, an Ethiopian father in Portland, by racist skinheads, using a baseball bat, instead of the fish club that was used against Clay.

Whether or not the word nigger or any other racial epithet was used during the attack, or there is any other overt evidence meeting the definition of a hate crime, the simple fact remains that two able-bodied teenagers attacked an older man walking with a cane. One can cast aspersions on parents who through possible neglect raise cowards, and one can possibly sue said parents or their legally adult children for the costs of medical bills and pain and suffering, but as Clay pointed out (EW cover story 8/14), the attack itself points to a degradation in community values, which cannot simply be repaired by marches and vigils.

I offer an analogy: If former Eugene Symphony music director Marin Alsop had been attacked while jogging on the bike path or Amazon, we'd be even more shocked, the outcry would be greater, even though violence against women in this community is even more commonplace. We live in a society where even a Rosa Parks can be rolled by a crackhead for her purse, without the crackhead even knowing who Rosa Parks was.

Two teenagers were raised without sufficient empathy towards the pain and suffering of others, in order to inflict pain and suffering on another. Regardless of the divisions of race, gender and class, whether you can blame it on parents, videogames, television or lack of education, the problem remains how to restore the social connections that prevent such behavior and worse behaviors in the future.

Clearly social connections had been established that made the attack on Michael Clay "normal" behavior. It's beyond dispute that there remain historical traditions dating back to the formation of the state, and within Eugene history, that support so-called hate crimes. When the kids go to prison, they will be considered heroes by the white supremacist gang members that infest the so-called corrections system and remain a consistent presence in our community.

Retributive justice can sentence them to prison, coerce them into paying restitution and doing community service upon their release, but that will probably be the end of it. We will still have a community in which women, minorities and vulnerable others can be assaulted, exploited and denied equal protection or access to safety.

I don't worry in particular about walking late at night in my neighborhood, but I also never go walking without considering possible lines of attack. Perhaps it's paranoia, perhaps it's prudence, but it is an indicator that the justification for fear is not imaginary.

How do we restore severed relationships? I would suggest the larger community consider the establishment of a cross-cultural rites-of-passage program, parallel or in tandem with what LCC has been doing for more than a decade with kids of color. What would a nonracist, nonsexist, nonheterosexist, an-archist (without hierarchy/class/caste) Anglo culture look like? If there were class distinctions, it would be for one's ability to bring different people together across their conflicts and utilize their diversity, not create fear because of it. An-archy in its original sense does not mean chaos; it means without hierarchy. In cultures of tradition (aka "primitive indigenous people of color"), a chief or an elder is selected by the people for the ability to unite people, not to instill fear in them. Not to lead from above, but to move them from within. This requires a network of interrelationships generally invisible to Western anthropologists.

How do we illuminate and eliminate the divisions and differences that divide us so that instead of asking for a cigarette and beating a black man, random white teenagers know him and escort him home as the Boy Scouts were reputed to do in walking elderly ladies across the street, back in my day?

How do we restore or recreate those connections?

HOW TO PROTEST

I have been reading, with some interest, the replies to my letter ("Yes, Sir!", 7/3) placing part of the blame on protesters escalating confrontations with the Eugene police. Let me quickly touch on some of those responses.

When did the white, middle class protesters of Eugene become the black protesters of the Deep South in 1955? There are no policemen with water hoses waiting. In fact, no one really cares if there are protests in Eugene. There is more excitement when the pancake van opens at a Grateful Dead offshoot concert. The police just want everyone to follow the laws. The police really want to do their jobs, without getting hurt and without hurting anyone.

When did the First Amendment to the Constitution get rewritten to allow breaking the law? Can bank robbers claim they are innocent if they are protesting too? Just silly. When did the republic form of government in the U.S. become a fascist government? Just clueless. Arguments based on name-calling and ignorance don't work.

If you break the law during a protest, it is called "civil disobedience." It is a time-honored way of moving your protest forward. If you are going to get arrested for the cause, do it with class and dignity. There is no way to punish you in the U.S. beyond a slap on the wrist. You can't win if you resist arrest; the laws are stacked against you.

If you wanted to get better results with your protests, wouldn't it be wise to study the great, successful protests in history and follow their lead? Gandhi and MLK Jr. led protests are great examples of how it should be done.

HELMET LAW

Regarding Karen Kennedy's letter (8/7): She thinks it would be great to have a new law to force adults to wear bike helmets. A Gang of Four song comes to mind: "Save me from the people who would save me from myself; they've got muscles for brains." If it is so easy to pass a law controlling the daily behavior of millions of people without their consent, but for their "own good," then let's pass some laws that are really for our own good. Let's make cutting old-growth trees and cutting in any headwaters illegal, and outlaw field burning and stop local businesses from dumping poison into our river that we and the salmon share and Corvallis drinks.

Oh, wait, that's crazy talk. We can't "control" these activities! The relatively few people engaging in them are making lots of money. And passing a law forcing millions of people in Oregon to wear bike helmets would also make a few people lots of money (on helmets). Karen, do you wear a helmet when you are in a car? That's when you have the greatest chance of a head injury. There should be a law.

PRIORITIES SKEWED

The police in Eugene are sadly coming up with a shortfall of violent crime arrests, even in the downtown area. After a few weeks of the exclusion ordinance in effect, will people start to realize the unfortunate reality? Friday of last week, six or seven cop cars were congregating up and down along the corner of Broadway and Willamette Streets, across from Ken Kesey Square. Several of them were truly doing nothing but looking busy. Is that to invite the idea that they are in fact investigating a crime? Hell no. The cops will tell you that violent crime has dropped substantially in the last year or so, but does that really make any sense? I don't think so.

The city of Eugene could sneakily be using the downtown area to manipulate funding. If the cop sees a dime bag in your pocket, he knows you're guilty of the charged offense, even if you say you are innocent. There goes that. But if someone is assaulted, like on Friday, cops will not make a single arrest. I guess at this point I have to ask about voter-passed mandatory-minimum sentencing guidelines for violent crime, Measure 11. What? The priorities of the police and downtown business owners are skewed.

Violent crimes certainly require more investigating than do possession of marijuana charges. Is that why the police would rather hassle the pothead than the one actually causing a disturbance, even with the already limited budget?

DUE PROCESS?

We should not be shocked that our City Council, with its recent "exclusion zone" vote, willfully trashed the due process clause of our Constitution. They are simply using the model of the Bush Crime Syndicate, which has repeatedly raped, abused, tortured or ignored the Constitution of our country.

As a frequent volunteer in the exclusion zone, I am very aware what staff, patrons and neighbors have to put up with from certain individuals. I sympathize with those who have had windows broken, threats and crap at their front door in the morning.

Hopefully some local lawyers or organizations will seek injunctions or stays, as needed, to prevent a single person who has not been convicted of a crime from having their rights violated by an overzealous City Council hell-bent on ripping another hole in the Constitution.

The above is significant and brings into serious doubt the fitness of the majority to govern our city. On top of above issues, did they deal with where so called "unwanted or excluded" will stay or hang out? Hell no! We should not allow those without backbone to govern us. This council mirrors our useless Congress, nobody willing to make gut-wrenching decisions. In this case our council said, "Oh, hell, the 'excluded' can go to Whiteaker, Springfield, the river, I really don't care, I want to keep my seat for another term."

Unlike the Bush Syndicate, which goes unpunished, those who knowingly voted to pass an unconstitutional ordinance should be removed from office and face possible criminal charges as well as civil lawsuits. Let the citizens of Eugene teach our Congress a civics lesson, and start the recall of those responsible for spitting on the Constitution.

JUST STAY INDOORS

Well, it's that time of year again: the time when you can drive between Portland to Eugene and witness the gifts given to the people of Oregon by the Grass Seed Council's 10 percent of corporate farmers who still refuse to bale, citing financial reasons they refuse to stop burning their fields.

These gifts come in the form of a type of mushroom cloud that permeates the air with pollution, which is very detrimental to the health of our children and older residents who suffer from asthma. Now to protect their health, the great concern that is shown is that the burning is monitored by Experts, who are hired to perform this task. If the pollutants are of sufficient quantity in the air, why, The Experts tell everyone to just stay indoors. That's like saying corporate goons are running through your city clubbing anyone they see, so stay inside and you will not be hurt. Whether the pollution lasts for a day or a week, or a month for that matter, just stay inside. So if you would like to stay healthy, why stay indoors this August. Nice.

Eugene is especially gifted by being at the end of the valley, so the pollutants can hang over the city longer. Let's promote Eugene to be the site of the next Olympic games, especially if timed to coincide with the burning. I know we can compete with Beijing for pollution. I mean, it's all about money anyway, so let's join the rest of the world and sell off our citizens' health for a few coins.

MISLEADING STATS?

In endorsing bike helmets, Karen Kennedy (8/7) writes, "Like motorcycles, we share the roads with cars and trucks, and thus share the same hazards." But there's a vast difference between bicycles and motorcycles, partly because motorcycles can keep up with cars and don't "share" the road (or the hazards) as Kennedy says. Bikes, however, do share the road with cars, though less dangerously where bike lanes exist than where they don't. There is also a much wider skills range for bicyclists compared with motorcyclists, primarily due to motorcycle licensing requirements (and often mandatory safety programs), including a minimum age.

Kennedy reports that "750 of the 767 bicyclists killed were not wearing helmets," but might they have died from their injuries even if helmets had been worn? We are not told, so we must be skeptical about her use of statistics. And she says she had a bike accident in Portland recently but fails to say whether it was her fault. While she's glad she wore a helmet, she doesn't say whether she could have prevented the accident in the first place.

I've traveled thousand of miles on motorcycles, and I always wear a helmet (even in my native Illinois, where there's no helmet law). But I will not wear a bicycle helmet despite (or maybe because of) my having biked thousands of miles, including hundreds of miles on busy streets in Chicago and other cities. Too many bicyclists fail to do these two things: 1) make yourself as visible as possible so it's unlikely you'll be hit, and 2) be vigilant to looking for hazards, such as car doors about to open into your path.

So perhaps bicyclists should be required to take safety courses and also to be licensed?

Think about it!

CHOICE OF WARS

Paul Prenskey's Aug. 7 letter worried that the Bush regime might declare martial law if Obama is selected in November.

However, we have been under partial martial law since November 22, 1963, the coup d'etat against President Kennedy (he was removed from office after he turned against the Cold War). Eisenhower's 1961 warning about the "military industrial complex" is now our reality.

Obama wants to increase troops in Afghanistan, to maintain Bush's military bases in Iraq and would be a better president than McCain to sell increased intervention in West African oil fields. Obama's advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski helped create the "Rapid Deployment Force," the predecessor

The Fix is In

Public safety vs. truth and justice

A pattern of conduct to inflame the public, discredit witnesses or participants and suppress political dissent has been in high gear since the May 30 Taser incident in Kesey Square. The fix is in.

Fix #1. The Department of Homeland Security conducted undercover illegal surveillance on citizens opposing roadside pesticide spraying and called EPD to the scene. The result: multiple Tasings, indictments, EPD media spin, "blue-washing" police misconduct and considerable taxpayer costs then and to come.

Fix #2. EPD spokeswoman Melinda Kletzok immediately issued a press release stating "witnesses reported overhearing rally participants prior to the incident planning a way to provoke a call to get police to the area," implying plots to provoke a confrontation. Those "witnesses" were one passerby who arrived as police were apprehending Taser victim Ian VanOrnum. This witness has now said his words were misrepresented by Kletzok.

Fix #3. DA Doug Harclerod assigned Sgt. Scott McKee, EPD Internal Affairs (IA), to investigate arrestees, witnesses, police conduct – all. Consequently, three UO students were indicted – two on felony riot charges. Sgt. McKee's multi-hat assignment is a blatant conflict of interest.

Fix #4. Typically with ongoing investigations and potential court cases, police are reticent to comment. Yet within days, EPD Chief Robert Lehner, in an email to City Council, exonerated all officers. Curiously, after first exonerating the officers, Lehner now states, "No comment."

Fix #5. Lehner has the final say in the complaint process. When complaints are filed with the police auditor/Civilian Review Board, IA investigates. The auditor and her board review those results, issuing recommendations to Lehner. Ignoring this voter-mandated process, Lehner chose to exonerate the police, which could sway the public or jurors in potential criminal defense or police misconduct trials.

Fix #6. Within minutes of the incident, many appalled witnesses asked police to take their statements. Police refused though they did accept a few witness statements favorable to the police. The refused witnesses then filed complaints with the police auditor.

Fix #7. Three witnesses requested an independent investigation. Instead a grand jury convened. After adjournment, Harclerod said "From everything our lawyer knows, there was no criminal activity by any of these police officers." He further implied in a KEZI interview that since the grand jury reviewed the case and issued no indictments against police, the police were innocent of any wrongdoing. None of the many witnesses who filed complaints with the police auditor testified before the grand jury. The majority of witnesses who did testify were police, along with those few witnesses whose statements favorable to police were accepted May 30. We can reasonably surmise how this grand jury was influenced to impose such serious indictments that could affect the lives, forever, of three young UO students. Ian Van Ornum, Anthony Farley and David Parziale have all pled not guilty.

The Oregon State Bar will be asked to investigate Harclerod's violation of this policy:

"A lawyer who is participating or has participated in the investigation or litigation of a matter shall not make extrajudicial statements that the lawyer knows or reasonably should know, will be disseminated by means of public communication and will have substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing an adjunctive [connected] proceeding in the matter."

Surely Harclerod, DA for 23 years, knew his interpretations of the grand jury's decision could have a "materially prejudicial" effect on court cases involving those arrested, recently indicted or potential police misconduct cases. Harclerod's inferences, added to Lehner's exoneration of the police, could sway public opinion and influence jurors.

If this does go to trial, could their comments taint a jury pool? Should defense attorneys request a change of venue? Should judges grant this? Yes. Judges can rectify damages, and the Oregon Bar could discipline Harclerod. However, damages to public perceptions of this case will be harder to correct.

Lehner's full exoneration of police disregards the voter-mandated external police review process, and his withholding of a citizen complaint from the police auditor on May 22 with the DA's consent violates city ordinances. His actions require disciplinary action. His boss, City Manager Jon Ruiz, fully exonerated Lehner within days of this violation being revealed. If Ruiz refuses to impose disciplinary action, Mayor Kitty Piercy and council must require Ruiz to hold Lehner accountable for trampling the law and the will of the voters.

Despite the DHS's unconstitutional policies and tactics and Harclerod's and Lehner's coordinated campaign to "blue-wash" officer misconduct, supercede the auditor and review board and influence the public and potential jurors, we believe justice will prevail.

The indictments are groundless and should be thrown out.

The financial elites are not going to remove the illusion of democracy as long as the "president" is subservient to the Empire.

TIME TO OPT OUT

Tired of unwanted phone calls or mailings from military recruiters? One way that recruiters get your contact information is from your high school, unless you "opt out" of the school releasing your name, address and phone number. "Opting out" can be done at fall registration or by contacting your school office and signing a form to protect your privacy and stop the release. But do it soon as schools generally release that information within a couple of weeks of school resuming each fall.

Your high school must release that information or face being cut off from federal funding. Either a student or a parent can sign the opt-out form.

The information local military recruiters get from high schools is used by them. But it also goes into a database run by the Pentagon, the management of which is contracted out to private marketing firms! Components of that database, besides what schools release, come from such sources as driver's license applications and what private marketing firms can gather on students from the Internet, playing military games, certain vocational tests, etc. So regardless of whether students welcome contacts by military recruiters or not, there is the danger of privacy loss if that database is compromised by hacking or carelessness.

It is never too early to begin protecting one's privacy. Opt out at high school this fall.

HIKING THE AMAZON

Eugeneans are taking advantage of the late summer weather and the city's new ownership of 40 acres in the Amazon headwaters forest to take a walk in the woods. The trail through the last pristine area inside Eugene's urban growth boundary has been attracting hikers and bikers

The city agreed earlier this month to purchase the parcel owned by developer Joe Green, paying $1.6 million for the property, a huge drop from the $3.4 million that Green was asking for the land earlier this year. The city could have purchased the property four years ago for much less, but the city, under then-City Manager Dennis Taylor, and then-Mayor Jim Torrey, refused to counter Green's offer of $325,000.

Lisa Warnes, a headwaters neighbor and strong proponent of the city's purchase of the parcel to preserve its natural resources, says, "It wasn't until Kitty Piercy and the more liberal City Council" that the city moved to purchase the land. "By that time, it was too late" to get the much cheaper price, she says.

There is no word yet on whether the city is making a deal on the nearby 26-acre Beverly parcel.

Warnes and other southeast Eugene neighbors are now working on ways to preserve and enhance the 40 acres of forest that has been protected from development. Warnes says, "We need to get the main trail out of the stream corridor, take studies and determine sensitive areas, do some mapping and monitor invasive species." — Camilla Mortensen

POLICE AUDITOR IN THE ZONE

In casting the deciding vote in favor of a downtown exclusion zone ordinance, City Councilor Andrea Ortiz said the independent police auditor was an important factor.

"We had an exclusion zone before, and it didn't work," Ortiz said at a council meeting Aug. 11. Part of that was "the way that complaints were handled" by internal police investigations. But with Eugene's new independent police auditor, Ortiz said, "there's a different way of doing business now."

"I have faith in the external auditor's office," Ortiz said. If people subject to the exclusion ordinance have a problem, Ortiz said, "they can always go to the auditor's office and file a complaint."

Actually, they can't. The auditor's office at 8th and Olive is well inside the exclusion zone. The ordinance passed by the council over the objections of the ACLU and human rights activists makes no exception for filing a complaint with the auditor over being excluded from downtown. — Alan Pittman

WHAT'S KILLING THE BEES?

Bees in Eugene may not currently fear extinction, but some beekeepers are concerned that it is only a matter of time. Bees pollinate about one third of the human diet, and their pollination makes possible 40 percent of Häagen-Dazs' ice cream flavors.

Philip Smith, a self-proclaimed "small-fry beekeeper," lost more than half of his colony last winter due to the nosema ceranae fungus. This fungus is of growing concern for local beekeepers with bigger colonies, but it is speculated that colony collapse disorder, stress from over working and long transportation are also leading to the destruction of the bees all over the world. Yet there could be more to the problem. "Stress from moving bees around has been done for over 100 years, so that's not new," Smith says. "The bees could deal with all these things but can't deal with farmers and growers with the imadacloprid."

LOGGING NEAR BLUE POOL

The trail to Tamolitch Pool is back open to hikers after a recent closure for a Forest Service salvage project, and not everyone is pleased with the results.

Tamolitch Pool, also known as Blue Pool or Blue Hole, is a quiet pool of deep blue water at the base of a mostly dry waterfall; the McKenzie river rushes out of the pool at its base. A scenic trail to the pool starts near Trail Bridge Reservoir and winds along next to the river through old-growth Douglas fir and over lava flows for about two miles. That trail was closed to hikers for several weeks during weekdays earlier this summer while the Forest Service salvage logged downed and damaged trees.

The original logging plan called for the project to take place in April to control a bark beetle infestation. Instead it occurred in late summer, which affected recreation.

Oregon Wild's Chandra LeGue says she is "disappointed" in the aftermath of the logging. On a recent trip to the popular hiking area along the McKenzie River National Recreation Trail, Oregon Wild's staff found the stump of a logged old-growth tree, damage to nearby trees, torn up trees and soil and exposed mineral soils.

Forest Service told LeGue that "they are not done with mitigation and rehab post-logging." The USFS plans to re-seed the area with native vegetation and remove residual paint from trees that were marked during the logging.

LeGue says, "While I'm certainly not opposed to all logging and understand that it can look bad for a while, I was never OK with this project and am pretty disappointed." — Camilla Mortensen

Imadacloprid, a pesticide found in the neonicotinoid family, is used on various fruits, vegetables, forestry and even turf. Germany recently put a temporary ban on neonicotinoid pesticides after a misuse of the product was deemed responsible for the death of millions of honeybees. The ban may make other countries think twice about their use of pesticides.

A recent lawsuit filed by the Natural Resources Defense Council claims that the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is refusing to disclose records about neonicotinoids. The EPA has not responded to multiple records requests for studies done on the chemicals since neonicotinoids were given conditional registration in 2003.

Congress gave the USDA emergency funds to study honeybee losses in 2007, and if you're worried about your ice cream, rest assured that Häagen-Dazs gave a $250,000 research grant to UC Davis and Pennsylvania State University to research honeybees.

"We should most definitely follow our European beekeeping friends' lead," says Smith of the German ban, "until the manufacturers of neonicotinoids can prove conclusively that these chemicals aren't lethal to bees and other beneficial organisms, including animals and humans." Smith adds, "In the meanwhile there are good, safe, organic alternative pest controls."

Smith urges people to not purchase anything with imadacloprid. Brand names of this pesticide to look for are Confidor, Merit Admire, Legend, Pravado, Encore Gaucho and Premise. For more on the bees and pesticide issue, go to www.vanishingbees.com

BAROQUE OBAMA?

The imagination and technical skills of local graphic designer Taft Chatham have turned to the presidential race this year. Chatham's Barack Obama T-shirts, cards and posters are showing up around town, including his "Baroque Obama," reportedly a very popular shirt with musicians associated with the Oregon Bach Festival.

Chatham is a substitute teacher and also known in the community as the former owner of The Comic News (before Don Kahle) and the Bijou movie theater (before Robert McNeely, aka Michael Lamont).

He says he sold about 400 "Baroque Obama" shirts for $15 each at the Olympic Trials and continues to market them and three other designs, including a Star Trek Vulcan-inspired "Barok," at Prince Pückler's, House of Records and the UO Street Fair. Triangle Graphics does the printing.

Chatham says his profits on the shirts are minimal, and he donates $1 to the Obama campaign for each shirt sold. —TJT

HOUSING BUST

While developers have complained that they need more urban sprawl to build on, the demand for home building has declined sharply.

Residential building permits in the city of Eugene dropped 39 percent from 2006 to 2008, according to a comparison of year-to-date numbers. In 2006 through Aug. 26, builders had received 1,074 construction permits. For the same period this year, the city gave out 652 permits.

The decline in building follows a decline in demand for new homes. The Regional Multiple Listing Service reported this summer that the local unsold housing supply

• It's been a quiet week here in Lane County with the Eugene City Council on break, people gone to the coast or into the mountains and gardens needing harvesting. We have bleary eyes from staying up too late to watch the Olympics, and now the Democrats in Denver are keeping us up at night as we watch their speeches and listen to the talking heads. The convention is highly scripted but still inspiring for Democrats, particularly the words and demeanor of Teddy Kennedy and Michelle Obama Monday. Barack Obama's speech this week can be seen free on a big screen downtown at the McDonald Theater (see Thursday Calendar).

Adding to the distractions from local politics is Duck sports. UO football madness is about to kick off, literally, with a home game against Washington Saturday evening at Autzen. Go Ducks! But maybe the distractions are OK. We can all use a little break from the sometimes tedious struggle to maintain some semblance of democracy and justice in our little piece of the world. Let's relax for now and then hit it hard in September when the days get cooler and the politics hotter.

• Bobbywatch.com is the place to go if you are not on vacation from local politics. The new website documents the "behavior and voting record" of Lane County Commissioner Bobby Green. The site provides voters with lots of reminders of Green's poor environmental record and support for big tax breaks for polluters. In Green's defense, he does have a good record on gay rights and other social issues. His opponent, Rob Handy, is also a social progressive, leaving LGBT civil rights group Basic Rights Oregon in a quandary and endorsing both candidates. BRO is advising their members to look at other issues in deciding who gets their votes. Unfortunately for Green, the vast majority of decisions made by the County Commission are on land use and other environmental issues, not on social concerns such as gay rights.

• Eugene's once-active Copwatch is making a comeback, inspired by general misgivings about the way the EPD is being run – from the lack of power given to the police auditor and citizen review board to the recent Taserings of a UO student and allegations of police brutality. Copwatch programs worldwide are grassroots organizations that monitor the police, often through videotaping police activity. Eugene's group says it's not just the EPD they'll be monitoring; they'll be keeping an eye on private security firms as well as Homeland Security officers.

Organizers aren't ready to go public yet, but here at EW we're happy to take donations of good used video cameras and editing equipment and pass them along to Copwatch.

• Aug. 27 is the one year anniversary of the death of 10-year-old Vaclav Hajek, killed by a car while walking his bicycle from the skate park across a busy four-lane Bailey Hill Road. A community effort is afoot to create a permanent memorial for the boy near the skate park. A makeshift memorial with flowers and candles is still in place beside the road, and city staff have been good in working with the Bicycle and Pedestrian Advisory Committee to reconfigure Bailey Hill Road to make it safer. Young Vaclav's death was followed by the death this year of bicyclist David Minor at 13th and Willamette, and a temporary memorial marks that site as well. Neither will last forever. The Hajek family and friends are wanting to create permanent memorials for those who have lost their lives in pedestrian or bicycle accidents. The city has a Memorial Bench Program already in place, but perhaps something more than a bench could be erected to honor the victims and also remind everyone passing by to be more careful. A water fountain has been suggested. Want to help? SELCO Credit Union branches now have a "Safe Passages Memorial Fund" set up, account number 453949.

• We wrote about Eugene's Weekday Market at the Tango Center as it was opening back in July, but the new indoor marketplace is not generating enough foot traffic to make it grow and thrive. Come on, people, get on down to 194 W. Broadway and do some serious browsing and shopping. Hours are 10 am to 4 pm Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Dancing and dance instruction still happen evenings. The website for the market is under construction at www.weekdaymarket.org

• Eugene and UO missed out on two prestigious lists. Outside magazine's August issue picked its "20 best towns in America," placing Corvallis fifth after Oakland, Crested Butte, Seattle, and Chattanooga. Here's why: "In recent years the city has picked up verve from a new promenade on the Willamette River and a steady transition to renewable energy. The new riverfront park, completed in 2002 as part of the vision statement, has helped attract more than a dozen new cafes, restaurants and spas, proving that being farsighted isn't so bad after all."

Sierra, the magazine of the Sierra Club, chose the "10 Coolest Schools: Our Annual Green College Guide." Middlebury College in Vermont tops the list, followed by the University of Colorado, Arizona State University, University of Vermont, University of Florida, Warren Wilson College, Oberlin College, University of Washington, Evergreen State College and Tufts University. Maybe next year.

FREE TIX FOR DIRECTOR SEARCH

Want to hear some great music for free? Get over to the Hult, where the Eugene Symphony offers up three nights of orchestral tryouts for the community.

The three finalists for the Symphony's music director position head into town beginning next week for days of rehearsals, meetings and interviews, which culminate for each of them in a concert with the orchestra. Each will conduct the first movement of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony (Symphony No. 8 in B Minor) and one movement of Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C Major, with Alexandre Dossin as the soloist. The candidates round out the evenings with some choices of their own.

First to the plate on Friday, Sept. 5 is Nir Kabaretti, currently the music director of the Santa Barbara Symphony. Kabaretti has worked extensively with choral music and has international experience ranging from Austria to Spain, Italy and Israel, where he serves as principal conductor of the Raanana Symphonette Orchestra. His program includes Mozart's Impresario Overture, Tchaikovsky's Romeo and Juliet Overture-Fantasy and Rimsky-Korsakov's Capriccio Espagnol.

A week later on Sept. 12, Bulgarian conductor Danail Rachev steps to the podium. Rachev is currently assistant conductor at the Philadelphia Orchestra after three years as assistant conductor at the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, where he wowed critics and audiences with his performances. He added Schubert's Overture to Rosamunde and Borodin's Symphony No. 2 in B Minor to his program with the Symphony.

Finally, on Thursday, Sept. 25, Tito Muñoz will show his skills with a program including Bernstein's Candide Overture and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. The young American conductor currently serves as assistant conductor to the Cleveland Orchestra.

Free tickets for the first performance are available at the Hult Center or, for the Hult's

Alley Oops

City gave UO basketball arena big subsidy

The city of Eugene charged the UO about five times less than adjacent property owners charged for land for the new basketball arena.

If the city of Eugene had sold its alley and street land for the new basketball arena at the same rate that adjacent landowners charged the Nike-backed UO project, the city could have made taxpayers $1.7 million more than it charged.

"The discounts on the property were arbitrary and not in the public's interest," said Councilor Bonny Bettman. "I'm not interested in giving away another public asset."

The City Council voted 5-3 on Aug. 13 to sell the land to the UO for $482,950 or $17.05 per square foot. But when the UO bought property for the project from the Williams Bakery and an adjacent landowner last year, the university paid an average of $76.84 per square foot. If the city had charged the same, Eugene taxpayers would have made about $2.2 million on the sale.

In 2005 the UO paid $22.2 million for the bakery land or $78.95 per square foot, according to a city report estimating the value of the city land. That price did not include the UO's added cost in having to demolish the bakery to ready the land for the arena.

Last year the UO also paid $579,000 for adjacent property along Villard Street (a 7-11, former gas station and offices), or $37.98 per square foot. This price also did not include the UO's cost of demolition.

Taken together, the UO bought a total of 296,438 square feet of land for the arena from private landowners for an average $76.84 per square foot. But when it came to buy the public property, the city sold its 28,328 square feet of public alley and street property to the UO for only $17.05 per square foot.

City staff argued that what they charged was a fair price. "We think the [city] appraisers used their best professional judgment," said City Manager Jon Ruiz.

City staff chose not to include the Williams Bakery value in a comparables analysis because it also included a bakery building. But the bakery building was not an asset but a liability for the UO, which had to tear it down and remove it to build the arena.

"The bottom line is that the buyer paid $22.2 million for seven acres of dirt, plus the substantial costs to demolish the former bakery to make it 'shovel ready,'" wrote Steve Roth, president of the Springfield Chamber of Commerce and a former city of Springfield development official in an Aug. 1 Register-Guard op-ed arguing for urban sprawl.

The city staff did consider the adjacent Villard property value, although it also included buildings to demolish, in estimating a value for its land at about $37 per square foot. But the city staff then cut that price in half, arguing that they needed to account for the value of public rights for utilities and pedestrian space to serve the project.

But Councilor Bettman pointed out that the city normally requires developers and homeowners to provide the land for such easements and pedestrian space serving the property without the city paying for or buying the land.

"We have a code provision requiring a homeowner when they do an improvement to build a sidewalk," Bettman said.

City documents note that the street land sold for the project is for a plaza area in front of the arena so that queuing pedestrians don't spill out into the street. The UO "will be required to meet all current code standards" for pedestrian access, the city states.

"The university is going to need a sidewalk; that is to their benefit for the arena," said Bettman.

New city buildings like the arena also can't be built without easements to connect the structure to the city's water, sewer and electric systems.

City Attorney Glenn Klein, who is hired by the city manager, argued that the council couldn't increase the price set by staff but only vote to accept or deny the sale.

The president of the private law firm that Klein works for served as UO President Dave Frohnmayer's top deputy when Frohnmayer was Oregon attorney general. The firm has denied any conflicts of interest.

After Bettman questioned Klein's all or nothing legal reasoning. Klein said, "Yes, it seems odd."

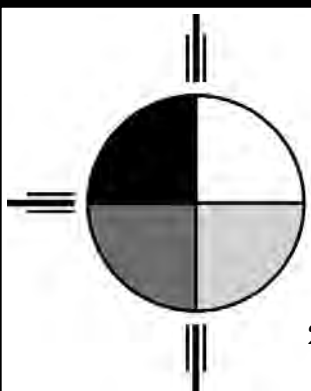

Bettman moved to reject the UO sales offer and renegotiate the deal.

But Councilor Mike Clark repeated the UO's argument that any delay in the project "would cost them as much as a million dollars a month."

Councilor Alan Zelenka called that argument "a total red herring." Zelenka pointed out that the UO has still not obtained the required conditional use permit for the project. "They are really going to sit on this for several months," he said. "The UO manufactured this sense of urgency."

Zelenka said that the UO has not had the same sense of urgency in addressing neighborhood concerns regarding the traffic, noise and trash impacts of the massive project. "The UO has been four years with the exact same issues," Zelenka said. "We still do not have a single concrete proposal to address those issues."

Tsst! The Dog Whisperer comes to Eugene BY CAMILLA MORTENSEN

Cesar Milan (aka “the Dog Whisperer”) pulled into Luv-a-Bull Pit Bull Rescue, tucked away in the wooded hills of south Eugene, expecting to see a pit bull with a problem. What he found was a peaceful enclave littered with happy pits and pit-puppies. Doggies were draped over chairs, lounging on couches and playing in a sunny meadow. What could possibly be the problem at this idyllic Fido hideaway?

It wasn't long before Milan met the reason for his visit. A dog so vicious that Lane County Animal Services wanted to euthanize him shortly after an officer brought him in. A dog so unstable that when his caretakers tried to film him to document his problems, he attacked the camera. A dog so unmanageable that after a year at the rescue, his anger and attempts to bite drove Luv-a-Bull Executive Director Liesl Wilhardt to seek outside help from Milan, the top dog of dog trainers.

That dog was El Diablo, and he's the most vicious Chihuahua to darken a doorstep in all of Lane County. The three-pound doggie-desperado was too much even for Wilhardt, a slim blonde Harvard-educated dog-rescue dynamo who thinks nothing of going for four-hour treks with a pack of pit bulls leashed at her side. After nine years of rescuing pits, the first dog Wilhardt couldn't train and fully control was the sort of pup you'd expect to find tucked into Paris Hilton's purse, not starving, feral and snarling in a Wal-Mart parking lot.

Not everyone agrees with the Dog Whisperer's philosophy and methods, but something needed to be done with El Diablo, and Milan is often the last hope of desperate dog owners.

After LCAS captured him from behind the massive Eugene discount store and brought him into the kennel, it looked like he was going to be put down. The pint-sized pup attacked anyone who tried to touch him. Even no-kill shelters will euthanize a dog if it can't be rehabilitated, and crowded LCAS has limited resources for any dog let alone a dog that bites. But Kylie Belachaikovsky, LCAS's volunteer coordinator, felt that the little dog had a chance if he could just land in the right hands.

Luckily for El Diablo he escaped the needle and wound up at Luv-a-Bull with Wilhardt and her coterie of pit bull (and Chihuahua) loving volunteers, including her partner, Patrick Leiser, a pro wrestler turned pet-friendly real estate broker.

Liesl Wilhardt started rescuing pits almost a decade ago, after realizing how few resources there were for the much-maligned breed. “I've been loving pits from the time I was really little,” she says. Luv-a-Bull rescues, retrains and rehomes human-friendly pit bulls and tries to undo some of the breed prejudice that the media have created around the dogs.

Milan too is a staunch defender of the dogs. He equates the prejudice people have against the pit bulls to the sort of racism humans have against one another. Milan might be a celebrity now — a dog trainer to stars from Will Smith to Oprah Winfrey, with a hit National Geographic show and two bestselling books on dog training — but he still remembers coming to the U.S. 20 years ago as an illegal immigrant from Mexico, who didn't speak English.

Milan was so impressed by the Luv-a-Bull's balanced pitty-pack, that he asked if one of his own pack dogs could be sent to Eugene to retire.

Milan says if we can learn to stop judging a dog's behavior by its breed, maybe we can learn to stop judging people by their race.

Milan says if we can learn to stop judging a dog's behavior by its breed, maybe we can learn to stop judging people by their race.

"We already do it," he says of the way people create prejudices about other races and ethnicities. "The Chinese and the whites and the Hispanics and the blacks; we do the separation thing, and then we start blaming them," he says. "My goal beside rehabilitating dogs is to help people understand that concept."

If we start to enact breed bans and judge dogs based on their breed, rather than as individuals, says Milan, "We're just nurturing that concept." He says if we can move past "racism" against dog breeds like pits, "then we can move into the human relationship."

"We can't blame the breed," he says. "We have to see them as who they are; they're powerful and we have to redirect that energy."

Dogs and owners, according to Milan, should be matched according to their energy. You don't choose the right dog based on breed, you choose based on energy. "The dog is not going to think 'Oh my God, this human just rescued me, he's such a great human, I'm going to treat him as a pack leader.'"

Continuing his metaphor between races and dog breeds, Milan says, "I'm going to speak as a Hispanic descendant. We have Hispanics who are low level, medium level, high level or very high level energy. There's not a race or a breed that's better for certain people; what is better for certain people is the energy that they're taking home." A low energy person needs a low energy dog. Only a very high energy person can be the "pack leader" for a high energy dog, according to Milan.

Luv-a-Bull's hours of walks a day, love and rehabilitation seem to work on even the most energetic of Lane County's pit bulls, but El Diablo, as it turns out, has a whole lot of energy for a Chihuahua. After working with the pint-sized terror, and an extensive interview with Wilhardt and Leiser, Milan decided to take El Diablo back with him to his Dog Psychology Center in Los Angeles. "My problem with Diablo is that I'm afraid of him," admits Wilhardt. Diablo's energy was throwing off Luv-a-Bull's peaceful pack.

Milan was so impressed by the Luv-a-Bull's balanced pitty-pack that he asked if one of his own pack dogs could be sent to Eugene to retire. A week or two after Milan's whirlwind tour of Oregon, Rakim the elderly pit bull was delivered to Wilhardt's door. Rakim was an escape artist in L.A., leaping off balconies and tearing through walls to get out of his owners' apartment before coming to live with Milan. Now Rakim (renamed Morgan Freeman) for the first time in his life will wander Luv-a-Bull's wooded trails in Eugene's south hills with Wilhardt and Leiser.

As for Diablo, Milan says the terror of the Wal-Mart parking lot has learned to swim for exercise, is settling into his new home, and well on his way to rehabilitation. EW

FEROCIOUS FELINES

CatBibs stop your kitty from killing BY INKA BAJADAS

Strapping a bib on your cat may seem like one (strange) way to catch the spills from her lunch, but this cat bib actually keeps backyard birds from becoming your kitty's next meal.

The CatBib, invented by Springfield resident Sue Mandeville, is a triangular-shaped bib that hangs from your cat's collar while it's outside. The bib aims to solve the problem many owners of outdoor cats face: receiving unpleasant "gifts" of dead birds or noisy surprises when their cat brings a live bird inside to play with.

Even more of a problem than the need to dispose of kitty's gift of a feathery corpse is the fact that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service estimates that "hundreds of millions" of migratory songbirds are killed by housecats each year.

Mandeville was frustrated by the number of birds her three cats were killing, so she locked them inside to stop the carnage. The kitties weren't happy and showed their disapproval by spraying in the house. Mandeville was desperate, so she decided to solve the problem herself. "I knew I had to put something between the cat and the bird," she says.

She came up with the idea of having a flap of material hanging off her cats' collars to get in the way of them catching birds. She cut a rectangular chunk off one of her husband's old leather boots. Using the hole for the laces, she tied it onto her cat Pearl's collar and let her outside. When Pearl didn't catch birds for a week, Mandeville knew she was on to something.

She patented her idea and eventually began making it out of neoprene because it is light, flexible and waterproof. The bib attaches with strong Velcro to a cat's collar and, just like safety collars, will quick-release if too much force is put on it. Mandeville says cats can do everything they normally do wearing the bib (except kill) and says her cats even sleep with it on.

Mandeville offers several theories on how the CatBib works. The bib might get in the way of a cat's paws or block its vision when it pounces on a bird, or the bright colors might alert the birds to the cat's presence.

'I knew I had to put something between the cat and the bird.'

— Sue Mandeville, CatBib inventor

Mike Calver, a biology professor at Murdoch University in Australia, did a study of CatBibs after stumbling across Mandeville's website for her online business, Cat Goods. His findings, based on a study of 63 cats, were published in July 2007 in Biological Conservation. He found that the CatBib stopped 81 percent of cats from catching birds and also stopped 45 percent of cats from catching mammals. He's hoping to do research on whether the bib reduces catfights.

Mandeville has taken heat from people who say they'd never humiliate their cat by putting a bib on it, but her website has more than 100 satisfied customer testimonials and sales have doubled since Calver's study came out.

Mandeville, an avid gardener and nature lover, is just happy to be able to relax in her garden with her cats, but most importantly she's doing her part to save the birds. "That's what it's all about," she says. "I'm saving birds, and the kitties are happy."

THE SCOOP ON POOP

To compost, flush or trash? BY JEREMY OHMES

I'm a plastic man, and I hate it. Open my kitchen cupboard and an avalanche of plastic sacks will spill out. I pick up plastic bags in random places and stuff them in my pockets like some shady plastic addict. I hit up newspaper subscribers for their plastic newspaper sleeves when I'm really in a bind. At the grocery store, I shamefully answer "Plastic" when asked that dreaded question. "I have a dog," I explain with my tail between my legs, and then I grab another handful of plastic bags while the cashier's back is turned. I justify my plastic addiction by calling it "recycling," or I tell myself at least I'm picking up my dog's poop (less than half of dog owners pick up their pet's waste, according to some park management studies). But I still feel wrong using a plastic bag. So what am I supposed to do with my dog's doo-doo?

The easy and "green" alternative that is always tossed my way is the biodegradable bag. Every pet store and supermarket sells corn-based, "eco-friendly" poop scooping bags or cat pan liners, and locally Market of Choice's "plastic" bags are made of cornstarch too. But these eco-solutions still follow the plastic bag route to the landfill. To boot, once these bags end up in the landfill, they won't break down any faster because of the absence of oxygen. So, the biodegradable bag's only environmental advantage is that it's made from a plant (probably grown with chemical pesticides) instead of oil, and that certainly doesn't assuage my eco-guilt.

Another pet waste solution that I've heard suggested is composting. According to Anne Donahue, the compost specialist for Eugene's Planning and Development Department, the city once looked into the possibility of promoting pet waste composting to address the accumulation of pet poo at city dog parks, which amounts to 20 tons of canine fecal matter every year. But after testing various compost piles and finding high levels of pathogens, such as salmonella and helminth ova, a hard-to-kill bug, Donahue and the city of Eugene do not recommend this practice. Instead, she and the city recommend burying your dog poop by digging foot-deep holes away from vegetable gardens, streams or wells, filling the holes halfway full with dog waste, and covering with six inches of soil. However, burying cat waste is not recommended because the eggs of Toxoplasma gondii or Toxo, a parasite found in cat poop, can last for up to a year in soil and lead to contamination. The burying solution doesn't work.

Many environmental experts and pet poop pundits assert that the best method for getting rid of pet waste is flushing it down the toilet. This way it gets the same treatment as human waste and it's just fecal matter producing more methane. To help make that yard-to-toilet transition a little bit easier, dog owners can now buy flushable, water-soluble dog poop bags. Once again though, this applies to dog waste only, as the Toxo parasite in cat poop can survive the wastewater treatment process, contaminating waterways and possibly harming sea otters, according to studies done by the Sea Otter Alliance. For cat owners, the easiest solution for getting rid of Kitty's poo and litter (preferably made of recycled sources and biodegradable) is unfortunately to toss it in the trash.

In the end, there are no easy answers to disposing of pet poop. The whole process is either messy or not as eco-friendly as we'd like it to be, and as Donahue plainly states, "Owning animals has an environmental impact and that's just something we have to deal with." Hopefully, with some digging and flushing, I can curb my plastic habit after all.

TOUCHY-FEELY HEALING

Eugene has alternative options for pet wellness BY COURTNEY JACOBS

Dan McGuire practicing his healing

Is your pet feeling down or acting a bit abnormal? Well, taking Fluffy to the vet isn't your only option. Your pup or kitty might just feel better after a nice massage or maybe a chat with the pet psychic.

Dan McGuire, who has been practicing therapeutic bodywork for the past four years and is a licensed massage therapist, believes that animals can be healed of many conditions with pure intuitive skill. Sara Willow, a pet psychic, has been using her own intuition in her communications with animals for the past 18 years. She says her psychic conversations build a strong sense of trust with animals and allows them to choose the issue they want to work on to better themselves.

McGuire and Willow aren't veterinarians, and their services do not replace a veterinarian's care, but they do believe that their abilities can help all kinds of animals.

McGuire says that some people are born with more intuition than others and that not anyone off the street can do therapeutic bodywork. In explaining his hands-on healing techniques, he describes it as tuning into a part of an animal's body and helping that creature's body correct itself. He has worked with creatures that range from injured llamas to limping dogs to 1400-lb. competition horses with back injuries and has restored the animals to pain-free lives.

McGuire doesn't just massage animals; he says he can actually feel and sense restrictions in their bodies and help correct and relieve them. "You can use your hands and intuitive feel. You can listen through your hands and your mind and you can feel things that the general public couldn't feel," says McGuire. "It doesn't always take a lot. You just have to tune into the body and go with the tension, not against it."

McGuire, who also works as a contractor and excavator, says his healing touch work "will have me fascinated for the rest of my life."

Willow, on the other hand, communicates with animals by using her psychic ability based on conversations with, and questions from, their human. Other times, animals will communicate to her and bring issues to her attention that aren't connected with their human. (Many pet psychics and other animal lovers do not refer to an animal's human companion as her "owner." They prefer to say "person" or "human" to reflect the human-animal relationship.)

Willow typically works with animals over the phone by communicating with their humans while using her psychic talent to "speak" with the animal. She says a session generally lasts for 50 minutes to an hour, and she charges on a large sliding scale.

"There's so many different ways an animal can communicate," says Willow.

Before she communicates with an animal, she always makes sure she is in tune with herself.

"When I ask an animal to speak to me, I first check with myself. I make sure that I'm in a very centered place," says Willow. "You have to trust your abilities."

Willow says that an animal can be helped physically, emotionally, mentally or spiritually by using her communication and psychic abilities. She also says she has the capacity to talk with spirits. "Whatever intentions we set for the sessions can happen, based upon willingness and beliefs," says Willow.

She believes that all animals can be communicated with, but that it "depends upon the animal's willingness."

"It also depends on how conscious they are, how conscious their 'person' is, and a variety of other possible factors," says Willow. "I make sure that the animal wants to speak with me too."

She says that it is not she who heals, but that she is invited in as a helper and acts as a catalyst for the particular beings to heal themselves. Willow says that there is something beyond what we can see and hear and that "we have more than five senses."

These are just a couple of the alternative pet healing methods out there. Other methods include acupuncture, holistic care, herbs and homeopathy, among others.

So if Fluffy is feeling a bit under the weather, give him a little extra TLC and try one of these alternative healing methods. He deserves it! EW

PETTY DISASTER

The improbable stoner flick of the year features dogs on horseback BY CHUCK ADAMS

THE TAILS OF ABBYGAIL: DREAMS COME TRUE: Written and directed by Terri Lynn Link. Cinematography, Daron Stetner. Music, Dennis Butcher. Starring Abbygail, Girlfriend, Barn Kitty. Kid Vid Entertainment, 2008. G. 35 minutes. ★★☆☆☆

Everyone knows that making a film is tough work. But never was it as tough as it was for writer/director/producer/narrator Terri Lynn Link while making The Tails of Abbygail: Dreams Come True (the first in a series of 13 installments). Link and her Oregon crew assembled an all-star cast of Jack Russell terriers, sheep dogs, pink poodles, horses and mama cats and had them act out their parts using trick photography and very careful edits.

The story centers around Abbygail, a Jack Russell terrier whose dream is to go "out there," into the wilds of the Sandy River Gorge. Within five minutes of the film's start, Abbygail accomplishes her dream.

The rest of the film follows Abbygail and her friend Girlfriend, a Bernese mountain dog, as they go swimming in a pool, mount and ride a horse, go fishing in a garden pond, pilot a rubber raft (with a skull and crossbones Sharpied to its hull, turning it into a pirate ship) and other (mis) adventures.

Mama Cat does give a very important life lesson when she takes responsibility for her children. "As a single mom, I don't have anyone else to watch my kids, so I need to stay home," she says, declining Abbygail's invitation to go on adventures. Is this a cautionary tale for pre-teens to avoid unwanted pregnancies or a glorification of the dedication of single moms? Probably a little bit of both.

Mr. Bales, aka Pirate Dog, has trouble

Tales of Abbygail professes to be for the "heretofore ignored demographic" of two-to-eight-year-olds, but Link has a tendency to overstuff her narration with verbiage while the static shot of a dog looking left for the biscuit, then looking right for the biscuit (avoiding a direct look at the camera) gets old real quick. I felt the inner brat inside me get bored and start burning a hole in the couch. That is, until I lit up.

Other points to consider:

Animal Cruelty: Despite the closing credits disclaimer, "No animals were hurt or injured during the filming of this movie ... Only Loved," the film's ethics are questionable. Offenses include shivering dogs who aren't allowed to shake off while filming, small dogs placed on top of tall horses so they can't get down and dogs in party hats.

Instilling Fear in the Hearts of Children: The lesson the dogs learn in regards to strangers: "What do we do if a stranger comes near us? We scream and we run for help!"

While I can't recommend this film for children, it does have the potential to be an opener for a Cats & Dogs/Pineapple Express double feature. EW

PET PARTICIPATION

If you can't have one, help one WORDS AND PHOTO BY CALI BAGBY

“You want me to get the great horned owl?” I ask my shift mate Peggy McConnell, who is a five-year veteran at the Cascades Raptor Center. I, on the other hand, am just reaching my seven-month mark, and sharp talons still make me nervous. I slide on gloves and reach into the incubator to retrieve the owl. As I hold the owl's legs and it rests against my chest, McConnell administers its medication for the night. The owl is impressive, with large yellow-orange eyes and brown feathers spotted with little patches of white. For a moment the owl closes his feathered eyelids and as he produces a deep and haunting hoo-hoo hooooo, shivers descend our spines.

Volunteering with birds or other critters can be beneficial for people like me who love animals but don't have our own pets. Making a connection with a feathered or furry friend can make dark days a little brighter.

During my four-hour shift, there are chores such as cleaning cages, defrosting mice for the owls' dinner and sweeping floors, but every task sustains the birds. There are moments of splendor, like when I deliver dinner to Gandalf the great grey owl and he does not fly anxiously about but sits majestically as I walk in front of him.

The Raptor Center is almost entirely run by volunteers who dedicate their time to the 60 resident birds, which include hawks, owls and eagles. The center rescues up to 200 orphaned sick and injured raptors every year in the hopes of rehabilitating and releasing these birds back into their natural habitat.

If winged creatures do not appeal to your senses, you may want to check out S.A.R.A.'s Treasures to get your feline fix. S.A.R.A.'s Treasures is a thrift store which donates all proceeds to the homeless cats for which it provides a safe sanctuary.

'It's like working with friends or family.'

— Melinda McCormick, S.A.R.A.'s Treasures

The organization is devoted to finding the right home for their pets. Potential parents are interviewed before they can adopt an animal. "We want the cats to be like family members," says shop manager Melinda McCormick.

Volunteers spend their time working as cashiers and litter scoopers, gathering the cats for medications or spending time lying around in the back with kittens that like to cuddle and lick toes. Volunteers are also rewarded with discounts on high quality pet food and toys. S.A.R.A. is always looking for new volunteers to join their small but dedicated family. "We have 15 volunteers and 12 cats," says McCormick, "It's like working with friends or family." Volunteers help to keep the business running so S.A.R.A.'s Treasures can continue saving animals from an unhappy fate. An easy way to support S.A.R.A. is to make a donation of new or used goods to the shop or, of course, to shop there.

Greenhill Humane Society supports a wide array of creatures, from guinea pigs to dogs to cats. The society maintains over 150 volunteers, including some that have racked up 604 hours. "Right now we really need help cleaning kennels," says Kyla Coy, volunteer and foster care assistant. Greenhill also relies on foster parents to care for up to 800 animals each year. Foster parents are expected to nurture and house animals for a limited time. Fostering kittens usually takes three weeks before they can be vaccinated and then adopted. Older animals need foster homes to become socialized and eventually fit better into a new family.

Lane County Animal Services is another organization that appreciates their foster families, which have saved over 100 kittens this year. LCAS is also looking for dedicated volunteers to train dogs, "cat buddies" to help socialize cats, photographers for their online pet finder and skilled pet groomers to work at the bath station.

"Volunteers can be part of change in the community's attitude towards homeless animals," says Kylie Belachaikovsky, the volunteer and community outreach coordinator for Lane County Animal Services. "Volunteers can help to make a county that saves all animals rather than relying on euthanasia for population control."

"Non-Profit animal welfare organizations like 'Luv-a-Bull' could not exist without people like Patrick Leiser. His compassion, enthusiasm and countless volunteer hours have enriched the lives of the dogs in our care, and enabled us to place more rescued dogs into loving homes. Thank you, Patrick!"

WHAT'S happening

As much as it doesn't make sense in a world overpopulated with needy dogs and cats, there are those who would prefer purebred puppies and tiny kittens to the homeless, neglected or abandoned animals maxing out the area's animal shelters. Save the Pets, a local nonprofit, hopes to change that line of thinking. The organization stages pet adoption events at heavy foot-traffic areas such as malls, the UO campus and gatherings like Art and the Vineyard where the shelter pets get more exposure and a greater chance of being adopted. But being a nonprofit means that Save the Pets requires generous donations of funds and volunteer hours, which is why they throw grand benefit galas such as this week's "Chuckle for Charity." Featuring local comedians – including the reigning S.L.U.G. Queen Leigh Anne Jasheway-Bryant (pictured) – and music from the Bill Shreve & Paul Biondi Project, along with a raffle that could put you on a flight to Las Vegas, this light-hearted event at the McDonald Theatre supports a worthy cause and is worth a chuckle or two. See Friday Calendar.

For such a lackluster week bereft of much to do (other than see some awesome live music next Monday through Wednesday), it's going to be a Hella Busy Friday in the Whiteaker neighborhood. Kick things off with the general activity buzz around the Last Friday Art Walk, perhaps starting with stained glass art (pictured) by Scott Floyd at the Art of Glass and making your sun-splattered way up Blair Boulevard and over to Polk for a raku clay firing demo at Clay Space. Bounce back to Scobert Gardens Park and dance to the trip hop/electronica of Spin One Half before meandering around the corner to see work from the Street Youth Art Project at CALC. See Friday Calendar.

Spoken word usually gets the short end of the arts coverage stick in EW, but rarely does it go about staging two exciting events on the same day and time, mere blocks away from each other. Hot damn, spoken word, you so hot right now! The first event kicks off at the Wandering Goat at 7 pm with Tobin Johnston performing his oratorical masterwork, The Brutalist, with a score on acoustic guitar performed by McKenzie Stubbett (pictured). At 7:30 pm, the folks behind the Eugene Poetry Slam present "The Art of the Spoken Word" at the Whiteaker Station. Featuring "several favorite local spoken word artists" (according to a press release), music and an open mic reading open to audience participation, this event promises to offer a "wonderful warm evening of creativity and community." The only question is: Which of these two spoken word events will you attend? See Friday Calendar.

A STORY OF BROTHERLY LOVE... OF BEER

↖ (ROB WIDMER)

1986 THE WIDMERS FIND HEFEWEIZEN HAPPINESS.

Brothers Kurt and Rob Widmer poured everything they had into building their first brewery. Two years later, they poured out something special when they tapped their Weizen beer directly from the lager tank. The result was a unique unfiltered beer they topped with a lemon to highlight its natural citrus notes.

Today, the Hefeweizen created by the brothers remains the definitive American wheat beer:

Atonement

Ice marks the place she'll risk everything

FROZEN RIVER: Written and directed by Courtney Hunt. Cinematography, Reed Morano. Music, Peter Golub and Shahzad Ismaily. Starring Melissa Leo, Misty Upham and Charlie McDermott. Sony Pictures Classics, 2008. R. 97 minutes. ★★★★★☆

Dear L,
Where have you been? I haven't heard from you since our conversation about Persepolis, the prize-winning animated film from last year. You called it "beautiful" and "brilliant." I replied — I'm only paraphrasing here — that it was "bitterly disappointing," "full of suffering without pain" and "way too simplistic." I may have compared it, unfavorably, to Peanuts. Then you said — actually, it was a look, a sort of grimace I haven't seen you make before. Oscar nomination be damned, I said offhandedly, trying to change the subject, which must have been when you said "Who are you?" The way you emphasized each word, it was almost like you meant it.

For the record, I don't "hate" anything, let alone a French cartoon. The word just sort of slipped out.

If you're reading this, L, there's a film I think you should see. It's called Frozen River. It's neither beautiful nor brilliant. Nobody in it is nice to look at, and the location — the tiny Mohawk reservation along the New York-Canada border — isn't in the running for your next vacation. In other words, Frozen River is bleak material. But remember, you liked Persepolis. Frozen River has pain you can feel.

Just days before Christmas, Ray (Melissa Leo) and her two kids are abandoned by her husband, a gambling addict. Desperate, Ray lets Lila (Misty Upham), a surly Mohawk girl, talk her into driving them to Canada on a smuggling mission. The idea is that Ray, who's white, won't attract the glare of state troopers, who patrol the highways looking for people like Lila, whom they disdain merely for being Mohawk. What Ray doesn't realize is that Lila is smuggling people. Once she understands, she can't turn back. What makes Frozen River so intimate and arresting is Leo's performance, which is both tender and steely, and in particular how Leo transforms ragged Ray from passive victim into willing participant. After a few smuggling runs, Ray has enough money for Christmas gifts; one more run, and she has a down payment on a home. Predictably, Ray's final smuggling run is a harrowing worst-case scenario of bad ideas and worse decisions. In other words, it's great cinema.

Frozen River is in many ways a poor man's Jesus' Son, another inspired if somewhat glazed-over story about addiction and its sibling, crime. If Frozen River is not directly about addiction, it's about the trials brought down upon the loved ones of addicts — and the way loved ones resort to measures nearly as desperate, and nearly as destructive, as the addicts do themselves. Frozen River won't win many awards, given that its best-known actor, Mark Boone Junior, plays the same small-time thug here that he did in Batman Begins. But Frozen River deserves an audience. Watch the way it cuts smartly to images of the frozen river, emphasizing the lure of it even when Ray is safe at home. (She isn't safe, not even from herself.) Or watch how Ray's kids interact with her and vice versa. There's such ease and familiarity, such devotion amidst base circumstances, that you might feel you're watching a documentary.

A story of courage and survival, Frozen River is harrowing but uplifting, which, come to think of it, is how people describe Persepolis. Maybe you describe it that way; I'm not sure you had the chance. Tell you what. If you see Frozen River, if only to watch Melissa Leo at work, I'll give the French animated film another try. Maybe I'll see something different this time.

Sincerely,
J

movies BY MOLLY TEMPLETON

Ivonne (Melonie Diaz), Dana Marschz (Steve Coogan) and Cricket (Amy Poehler) in Hamlet 2.

High School Shakespearical!

Hamlet 2 is half funny, half flat

HAMLET 2: Directed by Andrew Fleming. Written by Pam Brady and Andrew Fleming. Cinematography, Alexander Gruszynski. Music, Ralph Sall. Starring Steve Coogan, Catherine Keener, Elisabeth Shue, Joseph Julian Soria, Skylar Astin, Phoebe Strole, Melonie Diaz, Arnie Pantoja, Natalie Amenula, David Arquette and Amy Poehler. Focus Features, 2008. R. 92 minutes. ★★☆☆☆

It's a bit odd that there are currently two movies in theaters that involve Steve Coogan, and both begin with fake commercials. The ads that open Hamlet 2 have got nothing on Tropic Thunder's fake previews, but they do serve to make a point: Dana Marschz (Coogan) has little to no pride. In one ad, he tries to stuff an apple sideways into a juicer; in the other, he discusses his herpes outbreak. It's just as agonizing as it sounds.

Dana — Mr. M to his students — is a high school drama teacher with a habit of staging adaptations of popular movies. (The school paper's reviewer, who can't be more than 13, has no problem shredding said productions.) His two star pupils (Phoebe Strole and Skylar Astin, both from Broadway's Spring Awakening) are little bundles of drama-obsessed naïveté: One is a prissy girl who prays for racial understanding but gets nervous around the "ethnics," the other a flouncy actor who clearly hasn't quite come to terms with his sexuality. One day, Mr. M finds them outside his classroom, quaking in confusion: There are other students in there! Noisy, troublemaking, backtalking Latino students, even. All the other electives have been canceled; welcome to drama, kids!

Needless to say, Mr. M's initial attempts to reach his new pupils — which include watching Dangerous Minds for some insight into their characters — don't go over so well. Mr. M is wrong about everything, of course, and a brief stretch of Hamlet 2 is a bit of paint-by-numbers stereotype-exploding that isn't as funny as it should be. But eventually, somehow, his students are rehearsing, they're emoting, they're ... acting. And some of them are even relatively good at it, to their own surprise.

But Dana's also got a wife, Brie (Catherine Keener, funny but wildly underused), and a roommate, Gary (David Arquette), and an unnecessary subplot involving the two of them and a desired pregnancy that exists solely to bring Elisabeth Shue (playing herself, sort of) into Dana's world. The adults are flat characters; their scenes are a drag. It's only at school, where Mr. M has cast the kids in his original work, Hamlet 2 (the original is just so depressing!), that the movie stays lively. Mr. M is a disaster in motion, and his class is full of kids who've never cared about drama, but by twisting the inspiring-teacher tropes and making Mr. M in need of way more help than his charges, Hamlet 2 finds some golden moments. Sure, Dana has more enthusiasm than talent, but a) such is life, and b) sometimes that's what it takes to stage a musical that unites Hamlet and a time-traveling, jeans-clad Jesus (played by Mr. M, of course).

The best thing in Hamlet 2 is easily "Rock Me Sexy Jesus," a genius musical number that's the centerpiece of both the film and the play within the film. It's one of the strangest climactic musical numbers imaginable, bizarrely staged yet charming enough to make up for the weak moments that precede it. Dana never stops embarrassing himself, but at least he's not making herpes commercials. And by the end, the entire, much-maligned (within the film) community of Tucson, Ariz., is involved in the production of one high school play. Sure, some folks are trying to shut the whole thing down, but they're all there because of drama. Because of high school drama. Because of one idealistic, slightly insane teacher. If that isn't vindication for all that humiliation and grown-up disappointment, what is? EW

OPENING OR RETURNING:
Babylon A.D.: Vin Diesel stars as a mercenary hired to take a package from Eastern Europe to New York City in a post-apocalyptic world. There's more to the package than expected, though. With Michelle Yeoh. Directed by Mathieu Kassovitz (Gothika). PG13. 90 min. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.
College: Wacky teen comedy clichés ensue when three high school kids visit a local college. Yes, I'm rolling my eyes as I write this. R. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.
Disaster Movie: Is anyone else starting to find these mind-numbingly uncreative "spoof" flicks insulting? All kinds of disasters befall people! No WAY! Alas, way. PG13. 90 min. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.
Fly Me to the Moon: Three flies hitch a ride on Apollo 11. First flies in space! Apparently, this movie will "introduce a whole new generation to the awe-inspiring achievements of the space program's most momentous mission." Are there no better ways to do that? G. 84 min. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.
Frozen River: Melissa Leo plays a struggling mother who gets involved with a smuggling operation with Lila (Misty Upham), a young Mohawk woman from a nearby reservation. Roger Ebert says it's "one of those rare independent films that knows precisely what it intends, and what the meaning of the story is." R. 97 min. Bijou. See review this issue.
Indiana Jones and the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull: It's the only mainstream movie opening this weekend! It's got Harrison Ford and Cate Blanchett and Shia LeBoeuf and sassy Raiders of the Lost Ark dame Karen Allen! Also, it takes place 19 years after the underrated third film in a world facing the possibility of nuclear annihilation. That's about all I've got. That and a big plastic Indy whip. PG13. 124 min. Movies 12. ★★☆☆☆ (5/29)
Traitor: This dude-heavy flick stars Guy Pearce (where's he been lately?) as an FBI agent investigating a former officer (the always impressive Don Cheadle) who has a habit of turning up just when something big is going down. PG13. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.
Why We Fight: Director Eugene Jarecki (The Trials of Henry Kissinger) makes a compelling, if not exactly groundbreaking, case for viewing the military-industrial complex as another massive corporation. PG-13. 7 pm Sunday, Aug. 31, at Cosmic Pizza. Free; donations benefit Iraq Veterans Against the War. Online archives.

Films open the Friday following EW publication date unless otherwise noted. See archived reviews at www.eugeneweekly.com

CONTINUING:
Bottle Shock: Alan Rickman stars as the owner of a Parisian wine shop who finds all kinds of surprises (not least that the wine isn't that bad) when he heads to California to pick a few wines to use in a tasting contest. With Bill Pullman (as a perfectionist winery owner), Chris Pine and Rachael Taylor. PG14. 108 min. Cinemark.

Dark Knight, The: Christopher Nolan's second take on the alter ego of Bruce Wayne (Christian Bale), who has a new nemesis in the Joker (Heath Ledger, earning whispers of a posthumous Oscar nod), is both an enthrallingly entertaining summer action movie and a complicated moral tangle. With Maggie Gyllenhaal, Michael Caine and Aaron Eckhart. PG13.152 min. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15. ★★★★★ (7/24)
Death Race: Jason Statham (The Transporter) is a falsely convicted criminal (and racing champ) forced to take part in an evil prison warden (Joan Allen)'s brutal race, in which convicts compete ... for their lives! With Ian McShane. R. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.
Hamlet 2: High school drama teacher Dana Marschz (the reliably funny Steve Coogan) decides to produce a musical sequel to Hamlet that pushes the envelope in countless ways. Amy Poehler is the ACLU attorney who helps him fight the power; Elisabeth Shue plays, um, herself. The main song? "Rock Me Sexy Jesus." Sold. R. 92 min. VRC Stadium 15. See review this issue.
Hancock: Grumpy, drunken, superpowered Hancock (Will Smith, aka Mr. July) has a habit of wreaking considerable destruction when saving lives. But a PR guy (Jason Bateman) somehow shows Hancock that he does have a softer side. He can be better! At least I think that's what he says in the ads. PG13. 92 min. Movies 12.
Hellboy II: The Golden Army: "The world's toughest kitten-loving hero from Hell" (Ron Perlman) – with sidekick Abe (Doug Jones, last seen as the Faun in director Guillermo del Toro's Pan's Labyrinth) and love interest Liz (Selma Blair) – finds himself standing between an army of fantastic creatures and the world as we know it when an ancient truce is broken. PG13. Movies 12. ★★☆☆☆ (7/17)
House Bunny, The: Playboy bunny Shelley Darlington (Anna Faris) gets booted from the mansion and finds herself helping the members of a sorority that's in danger of losing its house. She teaches them about makeup! They teach her about individuality! Please, Hollywood. Stop that. PG13. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.
Iron Man: The first major summer flick stars Robert Downy Jr. as Tony Stark, a wealthy industrialist who devises a suit that gives him the superheroic ability to take down baddies who misuse his destructive technology. Awesome. With Jeff Bridges, Terrence Howard and Gwyneth Paltrow. PG13. Movies 12. ★★☆☆☆ (5/8)
Journey to the Center of the Earth: Brendan Fraser stars as a less-than-traditional scientist who finds himself leading his nephew and a friend into the center of the earth, where there's ... another world! In 3D, which makes all those falling rocks and underground dinosaurs even more exciting. PG. 89 min. VRC Stadium 15.

Kung Fu Panda: Jack Black – or at least his voice – stars as Po the Panda, a waiter whose love for kung fu serves him well when it turns out there's a prophecy about him saving the world from some powerful enemies. With the voices of Dustin Hoffman, Angelina Jolie and Jackie Chan. PG. 88 min. Movies 12.
Longshots, The: Inspirational sports movie, aho! Ice Cube stars as the high school football coach who rallies his team (and town) around the school's first female quarterback (Keke Palmer). I suspect victory lies ahead. PG13. Cinemark.
Mamma Mia!: Get the song outta my head! Oh, too late. Anyway, the giant hit Broadway musical becomes a giant film starring Meryl Streep as the mother whose daughter (Amanda Seyfried of Veronica Mars) wants to find out who her father is: Colin Firth, Pierce Brosnan or Stellan Skarsgard. Oh, and there's some Abba. PG13. 108 min. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.
Mirrors: You know that mirror gag in horror films? When someone swings their medicine cabinet into place and – gasp! – there's someone in the room? This pretty much looks like an entire movie of the mirror gag. With a lot of screaming. And Kiefer Sutherland. R. 110 min. Cinemark.
Mummy, The: Tomb of the Dragon Emperor: Brendan Fraser goes on his second summer adventure and his third as "explorer" Rick O'Connell. Rick's got to take down a long-dead emperor (Jet Li) who, one assumes, wants to take over the world (isn't that what evil emperors do?). PG13. 112 min. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.
Pineapple Express: Generally, this comedy (written by the same folks as Superbad) is about a pot dealer, one of his customers and some folks who want to kill them. Mostly. Kinda. Sorta. Directed by David Gordon Green, whose usual fare (All the Real Girls) is a little different. R. 111 min. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15. ★★☆☆☆ (8/14)
Rocker, The: You know it's August when you get a movie about a former hair metal drummer whose nephew just so happens to, like, really need a drummer, man! Rainn Wilson is the ex-metal dude; sassy Emma Stone (Superbad) is in this and The House Bunny, the poor thing. PG13. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.
Sisterhood of the Traveling Pants 2: The sequel to the sweet and light 2005 film jumps ahead three years (and, I gather, a few books in the series) to the foursome's departure for different colleges. Stars America Ferrera, Blake Lively (now a bigger name thanks to Gossip Girl), Amber Tamblyn and Alexis Bledel. PG13. 117 min. VRC Stadium 15.
Star Wars: The Clone Wars: Animated film sits between Attack of the Clones and, um... oh yeah: Revenge of the Sith. (I really had to think about that.) Anakin, Obi-Wan, Yoda and other familiar faces – and a young Padawan named Ahsoka – face off against the Sith while the Separatists and Galactic Empire battle for the fate of the galaxy. Or something. It's got lightsabers; what else do you need to know? PG. 90 min. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15.

Step Brothers: Just what the world doesn't need: another Will Ferrell/John C. Reilly comedy. This time, the two are immature fellows whose parents get married. They hate each other, and then they love each other, and then they have to save the family. And every single joke in the trailer falls flat. R. VRC Stadium 15.
Tell No One: Incredibly well-reviewed French thriller about Alex (Francois Cluzet), a man who's believed his wife dead for eight years – until he receives an email that appears to be from her. Bodies are found near where she died, and Alex is a suspect; he takes off in search of the truth. "Here is how a thriller should be made," said Roger Ebert. NR. 125 min. Bijou. ★★★★★ (8/21)
Tropic Thunder: Ben Stiller directs this wildly funny if somewhat meandery send-up of actors and war movies; he also stars (with Jack Black and Robert Downey Jr.) as one of the primadonna actors whose director (Steve Coogan) decides to impart a bit of realism to his Vietnam film – by dropping his stars into the jungle and filming their reactions. R. 107 min. Cinemark. VRC Stadium 15. ★★☆☆☆ (8/21)
Vicky Cristina Barcelona: Woody Allen's latest involves a man (Javier Bardem), his crazy ex-wife (Penelope Cruz) and two young American women (Scarlett Johansson and Rebecca Hall) with whom the former couple becomes "amorously entangled." Is anyone else having a hard time taking this summary seriously? PG13. 96 min. VRC Stadium 15.
WALL-E: The latest from the geniuses at Pixar is about a lonely trash-cleaning robot on what's left of Earth. A sleek robot named EVE discovers, when she visits the deserted planet, that WALL-E's figured out something important, so off to the stars (and the humans) she races, a besotted WALL-E in pursuit. "One of the best movies of the year," said Richard Roeper. G. 97 min. Cinemark. ★★☆☆☆ (7/3)
Wanted: This disastrously bad Angelina Jolie-starring assassin flick is directed by Timur Bekmanbetov, who was behind the underseen Night Watch. Jolie and Morgan Freeman are part of the Fraternity, a secret society of assassins; the usually delightful James McAvoy is the whingy former office drone who gets recruited after his father is killed. R. 110 min. Movies 12.
X-Files: I Want to Believe: Oh, Chris Carter. You gave me a title like that and then ... you failed. I wanted to believe that this X-film, coming years after the last and apparently requiring no previous knowledge of the X-Files mythology, would be as good as possible, but you stuffed it full of stupidity. And some offensiveness, too. Fie. PG13. Movies 12. ★☆☆☆☆ (7/31)
You Don't Mess With the Zohan: Adam Sandler plays an Israeli commando who really wants to be a hairstylist in this gently mocking and fun comedy from the minds of Sandler, Judd Apatow (Knocked Up) and Robert Smigel (Triumph the Insult Comic Dog). PG13. Movies 12. ★★☆☆☆ (6/12)

The Story We Heard

Blind Pilot pedals into the heartland of indie-folkster bliss

On an organic farm 10 miles north of Portland, dark, threatening clouds are hanging in the air at dusk when the core duo of Blind Pilot (Israel Nebeker on vocals/guitar, Ryan Dobrowski on drums) pull up on their bikes.

Logistically, the band is testing out its gear at this early August gig in advance of the West Coast bike tour that will take them from Canada to Mexico. But really they're here to have a good time.

Blind Pilot is a group that can still play to a large group of friends and fans at birthday parties, but not for long. Recently dubbed "the next big thing" by both the Willamette Week and the Portland Mercury, thanks in no small part to the Billboard Top 200 appearance of their independently-released debut 3 Rounds and a Sound, the band has quickly picked up a growing legion of fans across the country. So what happened?

will swell to a nine-piece mini orchestra and tour from Chicago to New York by rented bus. From there? Who knows. But Nebeker has an inclination: "[The iTunes thing] is going to happen in Japan next week; it's going to be a Single of the Week there." He adds, with muted glee, "I've always wanted to travel to Japan."

Back at the farm, the band takes to the makeshift "stage" of an outdoor kitchen and launches into "Two Towns from Me," which tones down the raucous party scene with its toe-tapping two-part harmonies. "When we're not amplified," Nebeker explains, "I just tend to strum really hard and break strings." At this show, without a PA, Nebeker's vocals (trained in the UO's voice program) are beautiful but soft in an Iron & Wine kind of way and, sure enough, he's breaking strings left and right. But tonight, it doesn't matter: A woman loans him her guitar, and the audience

Israel Nebeker's vocals are beautiful but soft in an Iron & Wine kind of way.

What happened is what Nebeker calls the "iTunes thing." The popular digital music outlet selected Blind Pilot's song "Go On, Say It" as a Single of the Week in early July. On the basis of that one free song, iTunes users moved 3 Rounds into the top five best-selling albums for the week. Next, Aimee Mann personally asked them to open for her July gig in Portland. Blind Pilot was met with a standing ovation at that sold out show, and bookers were soon clamoring for them to make an appearance at their venues. But first they have to do this bike tour thing.

Aside from Nebeker and Dobrowski, the bike tour will include Luke Ydstie (upright bass — towed using a hand-built, coffin-sized bike trailer) and Kati Claborn (banjo/dulcimer). After reaching Mexico, the band gladly sings along.

Blind Pilot is an Oregon band through and through: Nebeker grew up in Gearhart while Dobrowski attended high school in Eugene. In fact, the genesis of Blind Pilot started in the Emerald City, where Nebeker and Dobrowski met while attending the UO. 3 Rounds was born in the summer of 2006 in an abandoned net shed in Astoria, where the two friends sought creative refuge. Shortly thereafter an attempt at a West Coast tour ended with their bikes stolen in San Francisco. This time they're hoping to go further, both on tour and with more backup, and their intimate Sam Bond's billing should not be missed. EW

Bold As a Lamb

I'll never forget the first time I heard Jucifer, and in particular, the first 15 seconds of the Lambs EP.

It was after Jucifer's appearance on closing night at the old John Henry's, in May of 2002. My girlfriend went and brought home the record, telling me I would love the husband-and-wife duo and their total devotion to intensity. She was right. Lambs opens with the most unbelievable dynamic shift from gentle to heavy and loud that I had ever heard, and I was instantly hooked. Another friend who saw that show described their set as being "like the gods descended." Later, when Jucifer headlined the new John Henry's, I – thank you, gods – attended.

Wow.

Upon observing the whole back of the stage stacked with amplifiers, I absently assumed that each opening band would play, take down their equipment, load it into their crummy little van and leave. But amid all the chatting and sipping of PBRs that night, I never noticed that the wall of speakers remained untouched as each band went up and did their thing.

And then Jucifer came out. I am totally not exaggerating that the entire back of the stage – floor-to-ceiling – was the lone guitar player's setup. That much equipment produces a staggering effect, like standing in a guitar wind tunnel. When the onslaught of volumosity ended, I was physically weakened by what I had endured.

I can't promise perfection from a titan like Jucifer. Guitarist Amber Valentine and drummer Ed Livengood are plagued by technical problems – as can be expected given their sonic monstrosity. But I can assure you that each time I have seen Jucifer I have left stunned. Now, about the time Jucifer's dog bit my drunk coworker. . .

Jucifer and The Athiarchists play at 10 pm Friday, Aug. 29, at John Henry's. 21+ show. $5. – Edward Hoopman

MTV Tres Is On Fire

San Francisco-based indie rock outfit The May Fire serves up rock songs that pack a lot of punch. Sometimes saccharine, sometimes dark and distorted, The May Fire's frontwoman Cat Tasso lives up to her name, growling and purring just like her feline namesake. And it's so right for the music they play, which is at its core pop-punk but not in an obnoxious New Found Glory/Fall Out Boy way. No, this combines the best aspects of punk rock, its energy and heavy riffs, and the catchy, singalong quality of female pop vocals. Like the other bands on this bill, The May Fire has also been featured on MTV3, or MTV Tres, an incarnation of MTV that features music made by Latino musicians (The May Fire's founders, El Pipe and Cat Tasso, are from Columbia and Chile, respectively).

Los Angeles band Monte Negro joins the band on tour. Though they share that pop punk sensibility with The May Fire, Monte Negro's vocalist sings en español much of the time on their new Epic Records release Cicarix. Fellow L.A. band Astra Heights rounds out the bill, with a frontman who sings like he grew up idolizing Queen and Bowie. Mark Morales' theatrical, '70s glam rock delivery (complete with falsetto) is coupled with multi-part backup harmonies and songs with several distinct acts; in other words, it's almost like a rock opera, but without a discernible plot. And of all the bands on this bill, Astra Heights probably has the most interesting schtick going for them, not to mention the best lyrics, even if the heyday of the rock opera came and went some 40 years ago (which should not deter you from listening). That could be why, for a brief period, Astra Heights released music under Universal's umbrella but was dropped from the label the day after Universal finally released 2007's Good Problems. Too bad, but that's all the more reason to go see these rising rock opera stars when they'll get a bigger cut of your cover charge (and they do a badass cover of "Don't Bring Me Down." Convinced yet?). Astra Heights, The May Fire and Monte Negro play at 8 pm Wednesday, Sept. 3, at the WOW Hall. $8 adv., $10 door.

Xavier Rudd

Can You Dance to the Didgeridoo?

Surfers are righteous fun to watch but fucking boring to listen to. It's all dude-this and dude-that, and the bogus insights they dredge up are about about as trite and starry-eyed as they come. I mean, screw the Earth Mother crap, dude; those breaks you ride are the result of lunar forces and gravity working on vast bodies of water, so go wax your board and shut the piehole. The tide is high.

Xavier Rudd – the Australian musician/surfer tapped by actor and naked bongoist Matthew McConaughey to score his upcoming movie Surfer, Dude – plays all sorts of instruments to fill out his spacey, repetitive, reggae-tinged psychedelic orchestrations, including the didgeridoo in three different keys. The sound on his latest release, Dark Shades of Blue, is big and heavy and superfuzzed out, with more effects than effectiveness and more rehash than revelation. Rudd's voice, when you can make it out through layers of synth, sounds like Paul Simon doing the world-music thang, and the Aussie's lyrics have found 50 ways to turn a truism. The music isn't bad; it just isn't that interesting. If you can put your arms out in a Jesus Christ pose and roll your head on your neck with a look of Manson-baby rapture slackening your face, you're ripe for Rudd's planetary groove.

More interesting is Rudd's opener, Nashville-based singer/songwriter Griffin House. Grounded in the Americana roots tradition – Townes Van Zandt, Kris Kristofferson and especially new(ish) buck Ryan Adams – House writes gritty, sharply observed songs about the lovelorn and lost. His latest, the spit-polish produced Flying Upside Down, finds him branching out into '70s era Stones swing and soaring vocal balladry, but live this stuff should prove fit for the sawdust of any good honkey tonk. Xavier Rudd and Griffin House play at 8 pm Tuesday, Sept. 2, at McDonald Theatre. $18 adv., $20 door. – Rick Levin

Where Have All the Alt-Cowboys Gone?

Let's take a trip back to the mid-1990s, when alt-country bands were ambling out of local barrooms left and right and into the arms of major labels. Y'allternative was a force to be reckoned with, and while bands like Whiskeytown, The Jayhawks, The Bottle Rockets, Wilco and Son Volt weren't exactly shooting up the charts, they were the backbone of a cultural phenomenon. Country music was cool again, and people on both sides of the country aisle, the lovers and the haters, found common ground in the genre's hook-heavy, poppy twang. Some folks argue that the apogee of the alt-country movement is Old 97's Too Far to Care, and it's hard to argue back.

The Dallas quartet's third album and major-label debut was lightning in a bottle, a sonic shot and a beer, an unparalleled mix of Texas country swagger and tight, catchy pop. Since that 1997 release, the genre's golden days have disappeared (witness the demise of alt-country magazine No Depression and Wilco's metamorphosis into art-pop mavens). And while most of the alt-country purveyors have either lost their roots or ridden off into the sunset, Old 97's have refused to fade quietly into the fickle night. With their seventh album, Blame It On Gravity, the now actually kinda old 97's sound as confident as they ever have, trotting out a fine-tuned mix of spry, full-tilt foot tappers, middle-aged ballads and boot-scootin' pop gems. Rhett Miller's voice has matured from its heartache-laced, shoot-the-sun roots to a self-assured, whiskey-tinged swoon, and the quartet's songwriting is as surefooted as ever. Sure, Blame It On Gravity might not encapsulate the alt-country zeitgeist that Too Far to Care did, but don't blame Old 97's for not trying to make twang relevant again. Old 97's and Langhorne Slim play at 8 pm, Tuesday, Sept. 2, at the WOW Hall. $18 adv., $20 door. — Jeremy Ohmes

Coup de Grapes

Wrap up summer with a fine wine tour

Stay-cation. Cute new term that puts a dab of lipstick on the pain of soaring prices, falling wages and job losses that add up to postponing a real vacation this year. It's what to do this Labor Day, when working people — the folks honored by this holiday — are pinching pennies and squeezing dimes while trying to celebrate the end of summer amid the joys of Bush-onomics. If we can't afford to fuel the flivver for a long trek, we can pop for a few gallons to cruise home country.

And that's a very good change: remembering and re-experiencing the beauties of our waters, hills, farms and fields. Just a few minutes outside Eugene/Springfield in any direction we can rediscover the wonders of our place, why we chose to live here. And as we take our pleasures, we can also savor the liquid essences yielded by local vineyards, a time-honored tradition in parts of the world where grapes are grown and pressed into fine wines.

We've got the wines, and we've got the views, and on this weekend many local wineries — including some rarely opened to the public — are holding open houses, pouring tastes of their libations, even adding special events — live music, art shows, picnics. In short, there's a lot of there, there.

Before you launch, check open times: Most open around noon, but all have websites. Also, designate a driver, someone who'll enjoy the show but won't drink the wines.

But there're many ways to get there from here. We offer two loops — a two-day road-cruise — each with its own charms, in the journey and the destinations:

Day I. Valley of Delights

Actually, we begin in Saginaw, near Cottage Grove (if you must, I-5 to Exit 176), in Delight Valley, with ...

Saginaw Vineyards, 80247 Delight Valley Rd., 942-1364. Lovely place with 100-year-old barn as tasting room. The Byler family produces pinot noir and gris, a very nice pinot noir blanc (rosé), chardonnay, but savor the Marechal Foch, a big, dark, juicy red that won Best of Show at this year's Lane County Fair.

Roll along Old Lorane Highway, through forested hills and lavender fields, to ...

Chateau Lorane, 27415 Siuslaw Valley Rd., 942-8028. A beautiful tasting room overlooking manmade Lake Louise, with great picnic area. Owners Linde and Sharon Kester urge winemaker David Hook to experiment with 15 wines, some traditionals, some unusuals (Huxelrebe, malbec, baco noir). Don't miss their honey mead and late harvest Gewürztraminer.

King Estate, 80854 Territorial Rd., 942-9874, the Castle on the Hill. Beautiful tasting room, terrific wines from a thousand organic acres, fine dining with outside tables and breathtaking views, tours of the state-of-the-art winery, just a knockout. For Labor Day, visit the Marketplace for local foodstuffs and crafts.

Hinman/Silvan Ridge, 27012 Briggs Hill Rd., (866) 5-SILVAN. Jonathan Oberlander makes some tasty vins for the Chambers family; among the best are Early Muscat Semi-Sparkling and Silvan Viognier. Live music for the weekend from Bryan Reed and the Just Say Yes Band.

Sweet Cheeks, across the road from Silvan, 249-9463. Dan Smith's venture has been getting buzz for their picnic area (picnics much encouraged for the weekend), fabulous views and fine wines, especially the Estate Riesling.

Now, you can back-road home on Briggs Hill, through lovely and rather secret valleys, but be sure to stop at ...

Noble Estate, 29210 Gimpl Hill Rd., 338-3007: Owners Mark and Marie Jurasevich scored a bagful of gold medals from Lane County Fair (yummy Estate Pinot Noir Reserve), keep a pretty tasting room, nice western views. Open Sat.-Mon., 12-5.

Day II. City Mouse/ Country Mouse

Start in the heart of the city at ...

Territorial Vineyards and Wine Co., 907 W. 3rd Ave., 684-9463. No Labor day hoopla, just regular hours (4 to 8 pm) on Friday and Saturday, but tasting room is stylishly urban and the wines are terrific, esp. pinot gris, Capital T Pinot Noir, delish rosé. Live music Thursday nights, 5 to 11.

Now, zip out W. 11th to Veneta, through the light, to ...

Secret House, 88324 Vineyard Ln., 935-3774. Patti Chappel has taken the helm, created a venue for music (esp. blues), art, even faeries, of course wines. Sample the vinos, walk the gardens, cool your jets.

Drive back to the light, head north, toward lovely Elmira, wheel in at ...

We've got the wines, and we've got the views, and on this weekend many local wineries are holding open houses

LaVelle Vineyards, 89697 Sheffler Rd., 935-9406. Beautiful site, cool and lush, just right for the Great American Picnic, noon to 5 pm, with live music Sunday and Monday, tickets $7. Taste an array of well-made wines but don't miss the Estate Riesling and, for the picnic, the 2007 Dry Rosé of Gamay.

Back to Territorial, north, to Cheshire and ...

RainSong Vineyards, 92989 Goldson/Templeton Rd., 998-1786. Michael and Merry Fix are making a go of bottling their juice in clients' personal labels — good juice, too.

Territorial again, then left on High Pass Rd., weave into the foothills to ...

High Pass Winery, 24757 Lavell Rd., Junction City, 998-1447. Dieter Boehm is owner and winemaker of this small operation nestled among the trees, but the wine is fine, particularly the Walnut Ridge Pinot Noir.

Drop down to the flatlands, go left on Turnbow Lane, follow signs, to ...

Pfeiffer Vineyards, 25040 Jaeg Rd., 998-2828. Generations of the Pfeiffer family have transformed their sheep ranch into a successful winery. At its center Robin and Danuta Pfeiffer have built a fantasy Italian villa where they host multi-course gourmet dinners by special arrangement, of course adding selections of their pinots noir and gris, chardonnay, "blush." We've heard rave reviews for the 2005 Blue Dot Reserve Pinot Noir.

Following that brief sojourn in Tuscany-on-Jaeg, back to Turnbow, left (north) to Ferguson Road, right (east) to Territorial, roll (about 7 miles) through farmland arriving at ...

Benton Lane Winery, 23924 Territorial Rd. 847-5792. Steve and Carol Girard produce some fine pinot gris and pinot noir, and their tasting room is cozy, with a pretty patio for easy lounging and sipping.

Broadley Vineyards, 265 S. 5th St., 847-5934. If they were open — and they're not, Craig and Claudia Broadley, son Morgan and his wife Jessica comprise the family that grows and bottles some of the finest pinot noir in Oregon—or anywhere. You'd tipple, if you could — and you can't, until Thanksgiving — Claudia's Choice and Marcille Lorraine, the tops.

There's a quick road home through Junction City, Hwy. 99. Take Territorial instead, linger in the light; it's the same road, but coming back is a whole new journey. EW

ASK A MEXICAN!

BY GUSTAVO ARELLANO

Dear Mexican: Why do Mexicans paint stripes on their donkeys in Tijuana? – Avenida Revolución Reveller

Dear Gabacho: Same reason we put worms in tequila bottles, celebrate Cinco de Mayo, and star in Beverly Hills Chihuahua: to cheat gabachos out of cash. To paraphrase the classic dictum: a gabacho and his money in front of a Mexican tourist trap is a gabacho who deserves the Reconquista his wallet receives.

I grew up in the 1950s in Montebello, California. There was an enclave within the Mexican community known as pachucos. As a little white kid, I found their mannerisms, hairstyles and dress codes terrifying. Are these guys still around? How and why did they come about? There was even a hit recording called "Pachuko Hop" in 1952. – Todavía Aterrorizado de L.A. del Este

Dear Still Terrified of East Los Angeles: "Pachuko Hop" by Chuck Higgins — now THAT was the jam! All assertive horns, swinging rhythm, and a trumpet that bounced like the chichis of a fine ruca ... but I digress. There was really no reason for you to fear the pachucos, unless greasers, hippies, bob-bysoxers, hipsters and every American youth movement also gave you the willies. Pachucos were nothing more than Mexican hep cats: guys and gals who dressed in zoot suits and other fine tacuches, liked to neck, spoke a unique argot called caló and engaged in the occasional knife fight. Their roots span everywhere from El Paso (known to natives as El Chuco, and from where the pachuco name derives) to Harlem's Cotton Club (the primal pachuco is Cab Calloway, who popularized the zoot suit) to that fount of genius called the American spirit, which infuses youth with a restless energy. The only reason you associated pachucos with delinquency is porque the ravenous press, which labeled them as outlaws and inspired the infamous 1943 Zoot Suit riots, where many gabacho sailors and soldiers practiced their basic training by beating the living caca out of pachucos. Like all American juvenile "delinquent" movements, pachucismo eventually faded away, and its only real legacy is the zoot suit — which many Mexican teenage boys wear if they appear in a quinceañera — the amazing Luis Valdez play and movie Zoot Suit, and an easy dissertation topic for Chicano Studies majors.

Why do Mexicans creep forward at stoplights and stop signs? Honestly, it scares the mierda out of Tulsans to have a little mustachioed brown dude nearly crash his PEE-kup into us every time we try to travel through an intersection. – El Hombre con Preguntas

Dear Gabacho with Questions: It's called defensive driving — we follow it; gabachos obviously don't. Next!

Why do Mexican parents insist on wrapping their newborn babies in a dozen cobijas in 90-degree heat? – El Chamuco

Dear Demon: Everything is wrapped for Mexicans. Our tamales. Our food inside a tortilla. Ourselves around someone else as we prepare for a cramped trunk ride across the border. Babies get the burrito treatment to protect them from the elements, to transform into a shape better-suited for lugging around and to ensure the proper crisp their skin needs to achieve that wonderful Mexican mocha-brown.

CONGRATULATIONS TO: Henry Cejudo, who won an Olympic gold medal in the 121-pound weight class for freestyle wrestling. He was born in los Estados Unidos, but both of his parents were Mexican illegals, which makes Henry an anchor baby. Let's see, Know Nothings: Anchor babies have died in Iraq, changed the diapers of catatonic elderly gabachos and won Olympic gold for the Stars and Stripes. The only thing I ever see ustedes do is whine. Who better serves the States again?

Get all your Mexican fun at myspace.com/ocwab, youtube.com/askamexicano, or send your questions to themexican@askamexican.net!

free will astrology

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): My Aries friend David's acupuncture-ist diagnosed his current condition as an "encroachment of phlegm in his triple heater." That's also an apt metaphorical description of what's going on in your psyche. Your internal engine – the fire in your belly – is a bit clogged by a sluggish stream of swampy, snotty feelings. I suggest you take action to purge this creeping effluvia. A good way to start would be to do what Gestalt dream workers do: Imagine that the effluvia can speak, and ask it to tell you what it wants.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Borrowing some words of poet Eliza Acton and mixing them with mine, I've prepared a love note for you to use as your own. Feel free to give these words to the person whose destiny needs to be woven more closely together with yours. "I love you as a glad bird loves the freedom of its wings. I love you as I love the first lily of spring exploding with clear fragrance in the moonlight. I love you as I love the swell and hush of a low melody that brings the past to life again. I love you as I love the tone of a soft-breathing dawn whose soul has awoken for me alone."

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): In Greek mythology, the Procrustean bed was a torture device. Anyone foolish enough to lie down on it would be forcibly modified in order to fit its exact dimensions. A person who was smaller than the bed would be painfully stretched and those who were too big would have their body parts amputated. I beg you not to climb into any situation that resembles that bed, Gemini. You need an adaptable niche that will adjust to your unique needs and talents, not a rigid pigeonhole that squeezes and bullies you into assuming its shape.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Dear Rob the Astrologer: I recently discovered your column, and I like it. But I'm wondering if I'm approaching it in the right way. Although I'm a Crab, all 12 of your horoscopes seem to make sense to me and describe how I feel. Is this OK? - Curious in Austin. Dear Curious: You Cancerians are very versatile and empathetic these days. Given how open you are to being taught from every angle, you have my blessing to glean useful information from the horoscopes for all of the signs. This phenomenon will probably run its course by Sept. 23, and after that you may find that only the Cancer horoscope really works for you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): I'm not so interested in predicting the future as I am in creating the future. Why waste even a minute worrying about how things will turn out when you can devote your energy to making things turn out the way you want? It's true that in the horoscopes I offer you, I speculate about what may be coming. But my purpose in doing so is to describe favorable scenarios that you can use your willpower to manifest. Right now, for instance, I won't prophesy, "You may soon be blessed with a valuable new resource." Rather, I'll say, "Get out there, Leo, and acquire a tool or fuel or asset that will help you become more practical about fulfilling one of your dreams."

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): "I have dreamed in my life dreams that have stayed with me ever after, and changed my ideas," wrote Emily Bronte in Wuthering Heights. "They have gone through and through me, like wine through water, and altered the color of my mind." One of your main assignments in the coming week, Virgo, is to identify a dream that can work that kind of magic on you. If there is no such dream currently seeded in your imagination, find a new one to plant there.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): "The apocalypse won't be all that bad," Bible scholar Parker Creaston told the Weekly World News.
 There'll be a "brief period of mild to moderate disorder," after which will come an extended period of "worldwide peace and harmony." Similarly, Libra, your fear of impending chaos in your personal sphere will turn out to be overblown. Yes, you may suffer temporary shortages and inconveniences, as well as what we might call a metaphorical "traffic jam." But you can forget about mountains of fire, seas of blood, and hordes of locusts from the bottomless pit. They will definitely not be showing up.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You've reached a phase in your astrological cycle when you have special power to expand, deepen, and enhance your web of allies. My advice? Don't just schmooze and party, but rather schmooze and party with an evangelical sense of purpose, taking advantage of the fact that people are more likely than usual to see you as attractive, be sympathetic to your cause, and lend you their support. The connections you forge and the synergetic collaborations you ignite in the next three weeks could be major factors in your success in 2009.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): According to the Guinness website, the world record for opera singers receiving curtain calls is Luciano Pavarotti, who got 165 after his 1988 show at the Deutsche Opera in Berlin. If that mark is ever broken, it may soon be accomplished by a Sagittarian performer. That's because you people will be at the peak of your potential to garner acknowledgement, recognition, and rewards in your chosen field. Here's a secret about how you can take maximum advantage of that potential: Imagine that there is a higher, finer level of excellence that's beyond what you've understood as excellence up until now. Then figure out what you'd have to do to rise to that higher, finer level.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Below is an excerpt from a Charles Baudelaire poem, as translated by Louis Simpson. "Ask the wind, the wave, the star, the bird, the clock, everything that is flying, everything that is groaning, everything that is rolling, everything that is singing, everything that is speaking ... ask what time it is, and wind, wave, star, bird, clock will answer you: 'It is time to be drunk! So as not to be the martyred slaves of time, be drunk, be continually drunk! On wine, on poetry or on virtue as you wish.'" It is a perfect time in your astrological cycle to draw inspiration from that counsel, Capricorn. In addition to wine, poetry, and virtue, consider trying anything else that might work to achieve the desired exaltation, like meditation, dancing, sex, dream work, or a vision quest.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Thanks for the entertainment you've provided so far in 2008, Aquarius. Since last January, you have sent a nagging demon packing and corrected a kink in your integrity. You've paid off a load of karmic debt left over from the old days and have even begun to dissolve an outdated psychosexual imprint. Before I announce your reward for all this good work, though, I'd like you to make more progress on tempering your obsessive side. See what you can do to convert it from a part-time liability into a full-time asset.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): "The real secret of magic is that the world is made of words," said the sage Terence McKenna, "and that if you know the words that the world is made of, you can make of it whatever you wish." I'd go even further and say that you can actually shape your world through your use of language.
 Do you really want to live amidst infertile chaos where nothing makes sense and no one really loves anyone? Then speak with unconscious carelessness, expressing yourself lazily. Or would you prefer to live in a realm that's rich with meaning and beauty and interesting mystery? Then be discerning and creative in how you speak, primed to name the novel truths that are always being born right in front of your eyes. Of course you always have the power to create heaven or hell through the words you choose, Pisces, but right now is a potential turning point when you could form good new habits.

Savage Love

WORDS OF PURE WISDOM by Dan Savage

So I have been in a relationship with the same guy since I was about 16. It's been a little over four years now, but I came out to him a year ago about the fact that I'm bisexual, which he has no problem with. So since then, I have had wild fantasies about a threesome with a really hot girl. But it's a lot harder to arrange that than it seems. Do you have any suggestions about how we can find a third? We've already tried Craigslist with no luck.

Where The Girls At?

You think your luck with Craiglist is bad, WTGA?

Jeff Gradney, a television news reporter in Las Vegas, lost his job after some anonymous douchebag alerted the management at KTNV-TV "Channel 13 Action News" to the fact that Gradney and his girlfriend placed an ad on Craigslist seeking a third. Sexphobia? Definitely. Homophobia? Perhaps: Gradney and his girlfriend were looking for another dude. And for this infraction – which had nothing to do with his job performance – Gradney was fired. So much for "Action News," huh? (People who've had three-ways – or not – are invited to come to Gradney's defense. Send an outraged e-mail to KTNV-TV's vice president and general manager Jim Prather at jprather@ktnv.com.)

Gradney's dismissal came a week after a pair of nationally ranked college wrestlers – including a 2007 national champion – were booted from the University of Nebraska wrestling team after it emerged that both had jerked off for an internet porn site. (Solo jerk-off scenes, nothing gay about 'em, although the website is aimed at gay men.)

Sexphobes will say that Gradney and those college wrestlers got what was coming to 'em. People shouldn't let it all hang out on the interwebs – or spurt out, in the case of the wrestlers – unless they're prepared to lose their jobs, their spots on the team, their shot at being an "American Idol," etc. But with so many people documenting their lives online, and with so many people using the internet as a tool to seek sexual fulfillment, and in our thoroughly exhibitionist culture, one might think that people could picture themselves in Gradney's shoes, or those wrestlers' singlets, and cut 'em a little fucking slack.

If I may tweak a phrase: What happens online really ought to stay online. Your internet personals shouldn't be something that can be used against you by bluenoses at work; if you like to show off and you want to wank for the web, that shouldn't matter to the douchebags who run the NCAA. (Hello, NCAA? Want to generate interest in the sport? Encourage more college wrestlers to make JO videos.) Here's hoping that we soon reach a web-exposure tipping point, a time when everyone has something out there online that's sexually explicit or deeply embarrassing or both. When that blessed day arrives, we'll think twice about firing someone or cutting someone from the team for the crime of letting it all hang out online because, hey, we've got it all hanging out online, too.

As for how to find a third, WTGA: Most people looking for thirds want someone who's totally trustworthy and honest, someone who comes guaranteed to be disease-free, but they also want that someone to be a complete stranger whom they'll never see again after the three-way is over. Those someones don't exist, WTGA. If you really want to have a three-way, you either go with the likely-to-be-skeezy stranger you met online and risk dismemberment or you approach a trusted, attractive friend and risk rejection.

I am a 30-year-old woman in a relationship with my childhood sweetheart. My boyfriend and I got together when we were 15. That's 15 years ago. It was – and remains – an intense and extraordinary intellectual compatibility. He's the funniest and smartest person I have ever met. Sure we have had our ups and downs, but there is a lot of good stuff there.

Okay, cutting to the chase: I have never slept with another man, and I don't want to. I no longer want to have sex with him and have been having sex with women behind his back. I have long been attracted to women and suspect I would have been in a relationship with one by now if my life took a different path. I love my boyfriend, his family, our friends, our life. But nothing makes me feel more "me" than lying next to a woman after we have gotten each other off for hours on end. Do I come out, wreck my life and his, all because of one small part of who I am? Or do I stop being an unfaithful bitch and make things work with the man I love?

Why Do I Have To Dig Chicks?

First off, WDIHTDC, no one has to dig chicks. It's an elective, not a course requirement. (Except at Brown, of course.)

Now, seeing as you and your boyfriend are young enough to get out there and find new partners relatively easily, and seeing as this man who you profess to love has a right (1) not to be lied to for the rest of his life and (2) not to be cheated on for the rest of his life and (3) to be with a woman who actually wants to have sex with him, there's only one possible course of action here. Thank your boyfriend for his years of faithful service – honor his service – and then cut his ass loose.

If you play your cards right, WDIHTDC, you may be able to keep your ex, his family and your mutual friends in your life. But if you continue to lie and cheat and munch carpet on the down-low, and you get caught and outed, it's unlikely that your ex, his family and your mutual friends will want to see your lying, cheating, carpet-munchin' face ever again.

I just read the advice you gave to the kid married for six months. His wife bought a strap-on once he brought up anal. You threw a line in there about the University of Pittsburgh and Bend Over Boyfriend, an instructional video about pegging. Are you implying that the Pitt girls are into this? I live 10 minutes from the main campus and would love to find a dominant pegger. Just don't know how I would even begin the conversation.

Submissive U-Peggee

Did I say that U-Pitt shows Bend Over Boyfriend as a part of freshman orientation? I may have misspoken. Or mistypen. It's just that I recently gave a speech at U-Pitt, and the students there asked so many questions about pegging during the Q&A that I just assumed that Bend Over Boyfriend is shown to incoming classes at that fine institution of higher learning. (And I'm not saying that it shouldn't be shown, only that it isn't. It most definitely should. Indeed, Bend Over Boyfriend should be shown continuously in every frat house in North America from late August through early June.) But I would beg you, SUP, not to stalk U-Pitt's campus in search of a dominant pegger. If you're having trouble finding a pegger through normal channels (surfing the web, asking women you're dating, hanging out at Wendy's), SUP, then you'll just have to rent one.

Oh, and speaking of speaking at colleges: If you want me to come to your campus and give a talk – we call it "Savage Love Live" – email the folks who handle my speaking gigs at savagelove@kepplerspeakers.com
